"THERE'S NO FOOL LIKE AN OLD FOOL"

Proof of the Adage Found in the Ease with Which Fair Charmers Dipped Into the Money Bags of a Venerable U. S. Senator, a Senile Illinois Millionaire, a Lonely Brooklyn Financier, a Coffee King, a Rich Civil War Veteran and an Aged Steel Magnate.

THAT there's no fool like an old fool, and that at sight of the elderly victim Cupid puts his finger alongside his nose and chuckles, has been again proved by the news columns of the press of this country.

The spectacle of a United States Senator, the acknowledged "boss" of the dominant political party in the Empire State, infirm from age and disease, smiling self-consciously at the reading of his alleged love letters and admitting that he "may have been foolish because she was a very agreeable woman," was one that astounded the country.

Senator Thomas C. Platt had passed his allotted three score and ten years by five when the humiliation of his position was thrust upon him by his own folly. Miss Mae Wood, an ex-Government clerk and a former newspaper woman, sued him for absolute divorce while he had a wife living, and not only living but active, for the present Mrs. Platt also contemplates securing a divorce. Miss Mae Wood asserts that she was secretly married to the Senator previous to his marriage to Mrs. Carrie Janeway. It was a grave charge, but when the evidence was presented to the jury its gravity fled.

Miss Wood swore that the Senator begged her not to make public their marriage. "People would think I was an old fool and it might prevent my re-election," was his plea, which may also be a prophecy.

"Platt had a right to his private amusements, but he had no right to make himself ridiculous," said one of the mightiest practical politicians. "We must punish him at the polls."

There is little doubt that the absurd picture of the old man on the witness stand, simpering his approval or denial of the letters as they were read, one by one, in open court, the ripples of derisive laughter forming an obligato to the harsh, hurrying voice of the clerk, was a force greater than the combined efforts of all his opponents.

One of the letters was as follows:

"My Dear Little One—Yours received. It is so bright and original and cheered me up so that I am almost reconciled to Odell's election. I feel that I ought to have the liberty to do as I please the rest of my life, and I love you, you, you, and send you a thousand kisses for the one you sent me and a thousand times as fervent.

"Always lovingly,

"TOM."

Another letter admitted as evidence runs in dolorous vein.

"I am pleased with your letter of yesterday. Your letters read like books. I am overwhelmed with letters and telegrams of congratulation. It is pleasant to receive them, but it is dreadful to contemplate that I am seventy years old. Think of it. I am 'Old Man Platt' now. You had better discard me before I die."

MRS MAY PEPPER VANDERBILT

GOLDIE MOHR

MISS MAE WOOD.

MISS ELLNA HAMILTON.

MISS MABELLE M'NAMARA.

MRS. MAUDE BONNELLE.

Other letters admitted in evidence were these:

"My Dear, Dearest May-June-November Bride:

"I wrote you yesterday not to expect too much of me these days in the way of writing because of campaign matters. You are undoubtedly among good friends and seem to be enjoying yourself. I want you to tell them all that you know an old man back East by the name of Tom Platt, who is looking after your future. I have been thinking of you and wondering how you were breasting the world alone. I am miserable. "T. C. P."

"My Dearest Mae:

"Yours received. I note that you have saved fifteen cents. I will see that you come to New York to spend it. It does not do for young women to become too wealthy and save up too much. They are apt to buy too many swagger gowns and elope with some young man and leave their doting old hubbies to wear the willow.

"In a few days I shall send to Mr. Wynne to have you sent up here and I shall expect you to come without any hesitation or mental reservation whatever. You must not make any excuse hereafter, but must come to me whenever I order you to.

"Remember I am the Boss.

"As ever, TOM."

"It seems to have been a case of genuine affection," said a woman in the court room.

"Rather a case of senile dementia," returned a man. "He ought to resign. If he doesn't he should be forced out of the Senate. He must have read the 'Baby Bunting' letters, the 'coffee-with-too-much-sugar-in-them' letters. They cost that old fool a skyscraper in Brooklyn."

But the letters of the Senator of seventy-five are moderation itself compared with those from young women which were inspired by the nonogenarian, Colonel Thomas Snell, of Bloomington, Ill., and his millions. The number and quality of these letters, and the fact that the foolish old man spent many of his last hours perusing and reperusing them to an accompaniment of chuckles, helped his son to overturn the aged Lothario's will.

Across the back of one of the much-read letters is written in the old man's irregular handwriting the words, "This is the best letter I ever got."

"Dearest—You know it has been a long time since you were here. Are you never coming out again? I have been telling you that Walter has been down to see me several times. If it were not for you it might be different, but you know I have promised never to marry until after your death. Don't forget to bring a nice check along.

"BABY."

This is another of the perused letters endorsed with the appreciation of the millionaire, "The next best letter I have ever received:"

"Sweetest Darling—Years have passed since I saw you. At any rate it seems hardly possible that it is only a few days since we were together. Time hangs so heavy when I am not with you to see your smiles and see your love for me.

"Now, darling, I am sorry I have to speak of other matters just now, but you know love won't pay for bread or buy good clothes. I need both, more of latter than former. I want the clothes because it makes you happy to see me dressed well. It takes dollars to be dressed well, and you, dearie, are to provide them. It will take $500 at least to buy the things I want—maybe more.

"Now, don't fail me, dearest. Remember my position. Send it. Thousands of sweetest kisses and hugs from your own.

"BABY."

"My Dearest Sweetheart: Your letter written Sunday afternoon was received to-day. You can't imagine how glad I was to see your dear handwriting on the envelope the postman handed to me, for—just think, dearest—I haven't received a line from you for a solid week.

"I love you with all the love woman ever felt for man. I love you so much more than any of your relatives love you that there is no comparison, and you know that this is true. Now, you take the very next train and come out to see me. It don't seem as if I could wait another twenty-four hours without seeing you again. Oh, to have you take me in your arms and feel your kisses on my lips. Come, dearest. Your own. MABELLE."

The writer, Miss Mabelle MacNamara, was referred to by the six lawyers in the celebrated will case as "this adept at lovemaking." She must have deserved the title, for had the old man's will not been discredited several fine farms, $200,000 in cash and an annuity of $12,000 would have been hers, for so he had wished. When the nonogenarian lover visited his enchantress he always carried a gripsack, in which were often $30,000 in bonds or bills. When he returned from his visits the gripsack contained no money whatever.

It was proved in the suit for the invalidation of his will that, although he was a millionaire, he had been so generous to Mabelle and others, all of whom had written him love notes which he treasured far more than he did his mere vulgar coupons and bank notes, that when he died there was not left enough actual money in hand or at the bank to pay for his casket.

Miss MacNamara was the chief siren of all the alluring creatures who fluttered into his life, remaining there so long as money remained. Her power over him was so great that when she made the pouting plea that he sell a bank at Emporia, Ill., because his attention to his duties at that bank kept him so much away from her, he prepared at once to sell it at a loss. Friends interfered and induced him to wait. But he sold it in a few weeks for the marvellous Mabelle's sake.

Another fair letter writer on the aged Colonel's list of beneficiaries was a clergyman's daughter—Miss Ellna Hamilton; and her parents were in the secret.

And Mrs. Maude Bonnelle was celebrated as the only lady who resented the millionaire's attention when he wanted her to love him too.

The name of Colonel Thomas Snell, which had stood for half a century for sound and brilliant achievements in finance, is written, because of the marvellous developments in the will case, as another of the "old fools."

The taste of the Illinois Lothario was for young women, and as he grew older he preferred that his flirtations should be with still younger and younger women.

When Edward Ward Vanderbilt, of Brooklyn, grew lonely he forsook his state as a widower to wed a mature woman, Mrs. May Pepper, a spiritualist of international repute. Whereupon his daughter, pretty Miss Minerva Vanderbilt, wide-eyed and indignant, exclaimed: "Papa, you're crazy!" and brought suit to prove it.

In the Brooklyn court she told the story of her father's infatuation for his spiritualistic medium bride and said he was "squandering all his money on her." At that time Mrs. May Pepper-Vanderbilt, who is stout and elderly, told the story of their courtship.

"Mr. Vanderbilt is the mate of my soul. Bright Eyes, the influence that controls me, brought us together. I fell in love with his pure, beautiful soul. Our higher selves are mated to the end of time. My love is the deepest affection, for it is the love of soul for soul.

"I met Mr. Vanderbilt while his first wife was yet alive. His mother had been a spiritualist. His wife was a spiritualist. He for years had been a searcher into psychic matters. When he came with his wife to hear me at the church Mrs. Vanderbilt introduced us. We talked and I began to realize that I had met an unusual man. Then we began to study together. He led me along lines of thought that I had never travelled, and my admiration for him grew. I became interested in the man, not in his physical or mental side, but in the spiritual being I had met.

"Then his wife died and we studied on together. There had been no thought of our physical marriage until the idea came from without me. It was practically a command from the power that controls me, Bright Eyes. So, when this influence told us to marry, we obeyed."

Miss Vanderbilt asserted that her parent, who is sixty-six years old, was insane, and asked that he be restrained. The Court adjudged him insane, but private opinions found their expression in the trite phrase ending with, "old fool."

"I've been a fool," confessed John R. Platt, aged eighty-seven, when he resorted to the courts to compel a woman, Hannah Elias, who had fascinated him, to restore a part of the $700,000 that he had given her so that his "children might not suffer."

"I was born in 1820. My wife died many years ago, and I always tried to lead an honorable life until in my old age I got caught in this woman's net. I was for seven years a member of what is now the Seventh Regiment and was one of the men who raised a company of zouaves in the Civil War.

"I was the last president of the old Volunteer Firemen, so I've been a soldier and a fireman a big part of my life. It comes pretty hard for an old soldier to be disgraced at the end of his career, but am going to retreat in as good order as possible."

Hannah Elias still has the money, and has announced her intention of keeping it.

Alan Wood, a steel magnate, at fifty-five married Goldie Mohr, a chorus girl from a music hall. His sons and daughters were indignant. He left his mansion on Riverside Drive and lived with his bride in an apartment near Central Park. His death soon followed. That he had regarded himself as in the category here enumerated he showed by his dividing his property into nine equal parts and allotting to his widow only one-ninth.

"If my wife declines to accept this portion, she shall forfeit all right to the same," was his stern last testament.

But in the category of old fools men's names do not exclusively figure. Miss Margaretta Johnson, an aged woman who had enjoyed seventy years of single blessedness, frankly enrolls herself among them.

Miss Johnson, attracted by the display of Oriental jewelry in a window in Buffalo, stopped to admire it. A salesman came outside to solicit her patronage. He was a handsome young man with pleasing address and soft voice. She went within and bought green beads and a purple brooch. She came again and again to make purchases.

Though the young man was but twenty-eight, they married. Brief was their happiness. Despite that brevity, Mr. Kalil induced his wife to make over to him a large part of her fortune. With that sum he started a handsome downtown restaurant which has prospered. Mrs. Kalil has brought suit to recover the property she gave him. Mr. Kalil says, "It is bad form and bad luck to return gifts."

It is notable that if one must be an old fool the field for folly widens according to his riches.

King Edward VII. as a Ball Room Expert.

By a Member of the Royal Household.

AS befits a man who has literally danced from his babyhood and has danced at more balls than any other man in the world, the King of England is an exquisite dancer.

With the King it is not only training and good teaching, but heredity which makes him excel as a dancer. The great Queen herself was a highly accomplished dancer, and moved with that gliding, swaying motion which seems independent of any volition or motive power on the part of the dancer. King Edward dances like his mother, and when he finds a partner to his taste he thoroughly revels in the poetry of motion.

It is very much to the credit of the King that his accession to the dignity of the throne has made no difference to the country gentleman style he keeps at Sandringham. The servants' ball at Sandringham is an immemorial custom, and the King and Queen always seem to enjoy it. The King leads off with the housekeeper and the Queen takes the butler, and the fun commences.

It is possible and indeed probable that the King enjoys the servants' ball better than a State ball. Of course, an informal dance at a country house is best of all, for there all are friends together, and stiffness and formality are strictly barred. But the King finds the State ball rather trying, and when one considers his happy nature, it is not to be wondered at. At the State ball everything is done "just so," and under such circumstances the dancing naturally partakes of the prevailing stiffness.

Nevertheless, although the King loves dancing and likes to abandon himself to the enjoyment of the moment, yet he particularly deprecates the "jollying" tactics of the modern irrepressible youth. So strongly, and almost sternly, sets his face against all noise, singing and rollicking rowdyism in the course of square dances like the lancers.

Of course, many people think it more than half the fun of the thing to whirl the girls off their feet, and do all sorts of mad things during the ladies' chain and the rest, but the King likes all these things to be kept within the bounds of good art.

Fond though he is of dancing, the King never forgets the comfort of his guests, and is not by any means above giving his personal oversight to such details as the decorations and more especially the supper.

WHAT THOSE SHOCKING SHEATH GOWNS HAVE DONE ALREADY

After Causing a Riot in Paris and a Sensation in London, in America They Have Split a Church in Two, Called Out the Police, Blockaded Streets, Delayed an Ocean Liner, Burst Asunder in Public! And What Next?

The Effect, Sitting, of the Sheath Gown Split Up One Side, and How the Crease Down the Centre Displays the Form from Hip to Heel.

FROM the top tier of the grandstand men and women rose and craned their necks after the manner of startled geese. When they had stared to their fill the men sank back in their seats and grinned.

The women hid their faces behind their fans more or less according to the degree of modesty they possessed and smiled or tittered. Down the shining white track horses sped so swiftly that their feet seemed scarcely to touch the course. Smartly dressed women and men in gay moods sauntered and lounged about the greensward.

But it was none of these that caused the craning of necks and the smiles from the fashionables and the aristocrats, the decayed nobility on the exclusive tiers of the grandstand at Longchamps, the famous racing track near Paris.

Three dark-eyed, slender young women had caused the agitation in a circle where extreme agitation is considered bad form. They had arrived late and gone directly out upon the green rim of the course. Instantly the crowds parted to make way for them and then, falling into line, had followed the three young persons in a procession of curiosity about the enclosure. The young women glanced at each other, blushed, giggled, then, with an audacious air, straightened and with only an occasional smile and an involuntary dimple resumed their stroll about the course. They had remembered why they came to Longchamps.

Their errand was that which takes many women to large assemblages, the same instinct which causes the peacock to furl and unfurl his feathers magnificently in the sunshine. They had come to show their clothes. And what clothes! 'Twas these which made all of fashionable, sophisticated Paris gasp and blush.

They were the first women to wear the sheath gown. The gown is well named the sheath, because it fits the body as closely as the body as closely as the scabbard fits the sword. The shimmering fabric followed every movement of every muscle as the snake's skin its owner's sinuous curves.

"The sheath gown!" cried a white-mustached old boulevardier. "It does not stimulate the imagination. Indeed, no! It is the imagination."

But it was not alone what the sheath gown suggested. It was that which it candidly revealed that startled Paris. Not the mode Directoire alone, but the dessous! The dessous are the plaited veils inserted in the cleft of the gown. That cleft by accident or design followed precisely the line of the leg nearly to the waist.

Reproach the dressmaker for her daring, and she will reply: "Absurd. The Directoire gown is beautiful, classic. It is the Greek drapery adapted. The dessous are necessary. Without them madame could not sit down in her gown. Mon Dieu! It is so tight that it would split."

So the desson, or what the boulevardier styles the leg veil, is indispensable. If one has her sheath gown she must have her dessous.

The young women who promenaded the Longchamps had their dessous. But the dessous were of thinly plaited veiling, one fold alone of the plaiting. And when we remember that with the sheath gown one must wear as little lingerie as possible, and that the petticoat is impossible, we may understand the sensation the three young women caused at Longchamps.

A stout woman wearing a black silk gown and spectacles stopped on Broadway, in Los Angeles, stared through her spectacles, wiped them, put them on and again stared. That at which she looked, a half block ahead of her, had the coiling grace of a serpent, but also an unmistakable human guise. It was a woman's figure, and a very pretty figure, and it seemed to be gowned in the silvery scales of a fish. Hurrying until she was abreast of the human wonder, Mrs. Jane M. Beatty, president of the Highland Park Women's Club, stopped and stared again.

"Infamous!" she cried, and turning straight about, she hurried to the police station.

"Hurry, and you will overtake her three blocks above—a woman with the most shocking gown, open to above the knee. Hurry—go and see it for yourself—I just can't tell you!"

A policeman hastened up the street, overtook the young woman in the sleek, wonderfully well-fitting gown, surveyed her and it, colored, hesitated—and retreated.

"Men have no real courage," cried Mrs. Beatty, and took a car for the office of the Prosecuting Attorney.

"Her name is Miss Dorothy Graham," she announced. "That dress of hers is demoralizing the city. I demand that something be done."

From the conservative town, Taylor's Camp, Pennsylvania, comes the story of the tribulations of Mrs. Jane Leggatt, a comely young widow.

Mrs. Leggett, being a prominent member of the Civic Club, was invited to read a paper on a matter of public concern, in a neighboring town. Attired in her new brown sheath gown, she started to walk to the station. Suddenly something ripped, and Miss Leggett walked backward to the newsstand, speaking imploringly to the proprietor.

"A newspaper, please! O, quick! I don't care which. The largest newspaper you have."

Pinning the newspaper carefully over the rent made while she ran the widow walked slowly and shamefacedly back to her home. She has not since been seen in her sheath gown. Gossips say that the rent was from heel to waist.

Professor Augustus Dobbs, returning from two years researches along the Nile looked nearsightedly at a sheath gown worn by his neighbor's daughter, near Altoona, and said: "New, did you say? Why, the sheath dress was worn by Pharaoh's daughter. I've see a hundred lady mummies attired in them. Cleopatra wore them. So did the Queen of Sheba."

At Dressler's Pennsylvania, Miss Mary Helmsley, the soprano in the Presbyterian Church, has caused a division of the choir, which may result in a division of the church, because as she rose to sing a solo the worshippers observed that she wore a sheath gown.

In New York the Transatlantic liner, the Oceanic, was held for a quarter of an hour because its sailing was deferred by the excitement caused by the appearance of a sheath gown.

A beautiful young woman wearing a picture hat and a gray sheath gown of the most clinging materials, crepe de chine, waved her last farewell to a departing friend and walked down the gang plank to the dock. The longshoremen stopped work. The persons who were waving goodbys to the departing let their handkerchiefs drop to their sides or to the dirty floor of the dock. The crowd pressed around her for a nearer survey of the wonderful gown. The woman frightened by the crowd screamed.

"Stand back there!" cried a dock detective, but curiosity was stronger than fear of the law. The crowd pressed closer.

The Oceanic left at 10:15 instead of 10.

Two shapely maids in sheath gowns caused a scattering of the crowd on the board walk at Atlantic City. A part of the crowd, consisting chiefly of young men, surged toward the two dainty damsels. The other part, made up of married women, accompanied by their reluctant lords, who often glanced back to report to their indignant spouses what was happening, hastened back to the hotels.

At Revere Beach, Mass., a young woman who has a sheath bathing suit is at once the belle and the bete noir of the Summer city.

In Baltimore a sheath gown has precipitated a social war that has gathered each day fury like unto that which bursts in flames in a Kentucky feud.

The cause is a blooming, beaut belle from Chicago. Her ivory w silk sheath gown—the violent faction claim it was flesh colored—worn to [illegible] den party ruptured the friendsh strained the ties of the best fan Maryland there represented.

Winston Churchill, riding in Rot London, observed Miss Titcomb through Hyde Park in a shea habit. He stared. He co Frenchman who was also ne ing. They quarrelled. T threatens international

Teaching Her "to Love" in English

MANICURISTS AND COIFFEURS GAVE HER THE FINISHING TOUCHES.

How Young Millionaire Lewis Niles Roberts, of Boston, Discovered a Beautiful Little Italian Girl in Rome, Adopted Her, Educated Her in Paris, and is Now Going to Marry Her.

A ROMANCE that might have come out of a fairy book or from the chronicles of the age of chivalry is that of millionaire Lewis Niles Roberts, of Boston. Next month he will be married in Paris to the poor little Italian girl, Gina Pietra, whom he discovered four years ago in a squalid quarter of Rome.

He met her by chance as she came to draw water from a sidewalk fountain to take to her home in the neighboring courtyard. This is a universal custom in the poorer parts of Rome.

Lewis Roberts, strolling through the dilapidated old streets, idly interested in the curious architecture, stopped as he saw the girl at the fountain.

She was filling a big Etruscan vase with water and rested it for a moment on the edge of the fountain before raising it to place it on her head.

In that instant she raised her dark eyes to the handsome stranger, who approached the fountain.

Lewis Roberts saw in the dark beauty of her face the perfect type that he had long sought for. His father, though a millionaire publisher, had been an amateur painter of great talent, and the son had inherited the artistic instinct.

Fascinated by the girl's lustrous eyes, now downcast and concealed under long lashes, the young American impulsively approached and saluted the little maid deferentially.

He was looking for a model, he said. Would she kindly consent to pose for him, as the little water carrier, in just the costume and attitude she had at that moment? It was a pretty fiction, for young Roberts was not a painter, but it was the only excuse which he could conjure up at that instant for addressing the girl.

He had been fascinated in a way that he could neither understand nor withstand and speak to her he must.

The girl—she was but fourteen—blushingly said that she never posed for any one but her father.

"Indeed! Is your father an artist?" cried Lewis Roberts impetuously. "Then I must see him. Perhaps he will sell me one of your pictures."

And thus conversing he followed pretty little Gina Pietra to her home. The way led up a narrow, hilly street and under an old Roman archway.

In a few small, dingy rooms the Pietra family lived. One bare room, where the light was best, the father used as a studio. He was a man of considerable skill in his art, but ill-health and misfortune had kept him very poor.

Lewis Roberts bought several pictures and ordered others. This paved the way for further calls upon the pretty Gina. The young millionaire soon persuaded the father to accept money for the girl's education. She was sent to a fashionable girls' boarding school in Paris.

Paris had been Lewis Roberts's home since 1901, when he went abroad after his father's death in Boston. He had taken a picturesque estate at Giverney, on the Seine, fifty miles from Paris. There he was accustomed to spend most of the time during the Summer and Spring and Fall.

THE FOUNTAIN WHERE MR. ROBERTS FIRST SAW GINA PIETRA.

IETRA ROBERTS'S FORMER HOME IN ROME.

To this beautiful estate he invited Gina Pietra to spend her vacations, under the chaperonage of a relative. To his American friends and others he introduced her as his adopted daughter, and she was known as Gina Roberts.

The girl displayed wonderful brightness and adaptability to all her new surroundings. She had become thoroughly proficient in the English language, and French as well.

When she finished at the girls' seminary she was placed in charge of private tutors in Paris. Her fashionable education was begun a year or so ago. She had her manicurist and hairdresser, her modiste and milliner, like a millionaire's daughter. Her social mentor saw to it that the girl should lack nothing in all the fine arts that go to make a debutante attractive in the most aristocratic set.

The Countess Rene de Coetlogan, formerly Miss Georgie Blake, of Boston, became Gina Roberts's social sponsor. The Countess is a leader of the American society set in Paris. At her home in the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne Gina Roberts became a familiar figure. Her beauty was a matter of universal comment. At teas and receptions the slender girl, with the soulful dark eyes, the raven hair and the exquisite grace of motion, softness of voice and charming, vivacious manner, was always a centre of attraction.

She was a finished musician, both as a pianist, violinist and a singer. It was a matter of general comment that she was the most beautiful and accomplished girl in the American set in Paris.

So carefully had her secret been guarded that no one suspected that she was any other than Mr. Roberts's daughter. To be sure, he was very young to be the father of so mature a daughter, being but twenty years older than she—he being thirty-eight, while she is but eighteen. But nobody commented on that, nor seemed to suspect any relationship than that of father and daughter, so well did both play the assumed role.

Some months ago Mr. Roberts fell ill with a nervous disorder at his country seat at Giverney. Gina was his most devoted nurse for weeks. When he recovered he acknowledged to his associates that Gina was his ward, not his daughter.

Then he told Gina for the first time of his great love for her, that had possessed him from the moment he saw her at the fountain, through all the years of her education, while he saw her develop from sweet girlhood into beautiful young womanhood.

Gina Roberts then confessed that her love for her benefactor was something deeper than gratitude to the man who had raised her from poverty to wealth and social position.

A fortnight ago the engagement of Gina and her guardian was formally announced to Parisian society at a brilliant tea given by the Countess de Coetlogan. Next month the marriage will take place.

Paris is already congratulating itself on the prospect of having another beautiful young matron in the American colony to give brilliancy and charm to the social functions next season, while Boston is on the qui vive to see this newest addition to the Back Bay and Beacon Hill set. Art circles here are keen in their desire to get a glimpse of this dark-eyed beauty, who exercised such a witching charm over the young American millionaire, for her beauty is very rare.

Mr. Roberts has not stated when he expects to return to America, and his friends now fear that with this new tie abroad he will become a permanent resident of France.

Last month Mr. Roberts and his fiancee appeared together at the race meet at Longchamps. The young woman's striking beauty and stylish appearance made her one of the most admired figures in the fashionable throng.

What greater transformation could a fairy tale reveal than Gina Pietra, the little Italian water carrier of four years ago, changed into a Parisian society woman.

An Englishman's Views of Wealthy Americans.

By Harold Owen, the English Critic and Essayist.

"There is no country in which so absolute a homage is paid to wealth as in England. In America there is a touch of shame when a man exhibits the evidence of large property, as if, after all, it needed apology."

THINGS have somewhat changed since those words were written. Emerson wrote them some sixty odd years ago; but there is, so to speak, all the gulf of the wide Atlantic between then and now. But I set them at the head of this little sympathetic lament for millionaires as a good example of the irony of literal statement.

In America huge wealth may need apology more than never, but transatlantic millionaires, like Mr. Shaw's Major Saranoff, "never apologize," and whatever sense of shame they may have had sixty years ago, when they were few in numbers and perhaps abashed by their own novelty, has perished with Republican simplicity.

It would be a happy thing, however, if fashion changed and poverty "came in." What a lot it would do! How it would superannuate Parliament and trivialise the Budget, and simplify a thousand complications! But the pity is that fashion only changes and never reforms, or there might be some hope for it.

And then how many of us would brave social ostracism and become cheerful unfashionables if the centre of social gravity were so shifted, and it became positively vulgar to be worth even five thousand a year, and to own a motor car put you beyond the pale, and gentility made haste to sell all it had and give it to the poor, so that lowliness and unfashionableness might still go hand in hand! A mad idea, you say? Premature, perhaps, I will concede. But nevertheless there are tendencies to be noted pointing to the consummation.

For instance: On a typical English May morning, with the chill of Autumn and the murk of February in the air, a young man still apparently within the embrace of the fatal thirties, who was the cynosure of all eyes, might have been seen tooling a coach drawn by four handsome grays through the mazes of the vehicular congestion of Piccadilly.

"Might have been seen" is a mere facon de parler, for, as a matter of fact, I saw him myself. And if I introduce him to your notice, a phenomenon of the twentieth century, in a feeble travesty of the turgid literary convention of the early nineteenth, it is only because of a conscientious desire to uplift the occasion from the commonplace. For the young man who tooled the coach through the vehicular congestion of Piccadilly was—a millionaire!

If he were not a millionaire he would take his place in the general ensemble; as it is, he is the outstanding fact and all else is accessory. He is indulging his hobby, and if you book a seat on his coach he is subsidizing your pleasure also. Nothing could be less blameworthy than the hobby, and nothing more harmless than the benefaction; and the sensible thing about the hobby is that he indulges in it himself, and drives his own coach. And in the phenomenon we may perhaps perceive an encouraging symptom of a revolt elsewhere against the useless ostentation of wealth which Emerson rebuked in us.

I should dread the disillusion of great wealth. I should feel that I had suddenly shrunk, and realize how inadequate and trivial was my power. To be able "to do anything," and then to feel how little that is, and to be driven back on to the simple pleasures that now content me, compelled to find a refuge in what I now have from the thousand and one things I could have but don't particularly want, would overwhelm me with a sense of my insignificance as a millionaire.

I might, of course, out of sheer boredom establish libraries en gros, but that would obviously be only a desperate and unconvincing effort to feel like a millionaire. All pleasures must in the end be personal and selfish, and it gives me, even as things are, more pleasure to spend my hours in my own library than it would do to spend my money in providing libraries for other people.

Or I might make a hobby, say, of distributing bank-notes to red-haired people, but however I might try to cheat myself, that would only be a whim and not a pleasure, and the caprice would soon pall. Or I might spend the money with methodical and discriminating sanity, and found and subsidise all manner of useful institutions; but that would be a purely external affair, after all, and would soon develop into a mere matter of business routine, done through a staff of secretaries; and still I should have to be driven in on myself and on my own temperamental resources for all my joie de vivre. All the rest would be a mere dodging and evading of the situation; in the last resort I must fall back on my own personal and sub-millionaire self.

How a $50,000 Flat Went to the Dogs.

Two Bull Terriers and a Sheep Dog, Complicated with Three Healthy Boys, a Toy Auto, a Prince's Courtship and Wasteful Champagne Habits--Seems to Be What Happened to Mrs. Thomas's Charming Apartment While Sublet to Mrs. Tyler Morse.

"MRS. THOMAS MOVED BACK TO HER DEVASTATED ABODE ON THE HEELS OF THE DEPARTING SUB-LESSEE, DOGS, BOY AND TOY AUTO."

THEY are still discussing it over their fashionable afternoon teacups—the $50,000 Flat that Went to the Dogs.

"Think of it! Two bull terriers and a sheepdog in someone else's apartment, sublet furnished!"

"And poor Mrs. Thomas had such nice things, and was so careful of them—fifty-thousand dollars in furniture and bric-a-brac!"

"And Prince Helle"——

"Yes—to make her apartment their courtship headquarters while in New York."

"Lucky for the Prince, with the whole Gould family then so frosty-faced."

"They say the Prince and the Countess met there every day."

"Ah, those champagne stains on the velvet carpets and satin-seated chairs"——

"But the Prince, in an interview, said he did not drink champagne, only a little cognac"——

"Don't you see? Nobody drank champagne; they poured it on the chairs and carpet!"

"Those three boys, they say, made a toy auto course of the pretty private hall."

"Yes, with the carved doors at each end for buffers—the carpet, all streaked, and the battered doors tell the story. What could the poor Prince say?"

"Nothing, of course. Hadn't he promised to be a father to the boys?"

"It was the dogs, though"——

"Intelligent dogs, too—they had their noses in all the books"——

"Selecting the most costly bindings."

A pause—and then:

"I think Mrs. Thomas, who is always charming, was very moderate—$8,000 for all that damage"——

"Yes—when she gets it!"

A lovelorn, pursuing prince; an ex-countess, shy, but not wholly elusive; three healthy children and three equally healthy dogs are the chief figures in a story gravely recited to the Supreme Court and repeated to a listening trust company. The story is concerned with the practical wrecking of one of the handsomest flats in New York City.

The superstitious have opined that the trouble results from the fact that there are thirteen rooms in the flat. But that, others reply, has no bearing, because, in the language of the lease, there are "eleven rooms and two baths."

What is more to the point is the fact that the apartment, whose furnishings are adjudged to have been rendered unlovely, even hideous, by its sub-lessees, was the scene of the courtship of Madame Anna Gould and the Prince Helle de Sagan.

This shrine of romance toward which lovers taking a stroll up Broadway turn their wondering eyes is in the Wyoming Apartments. Of handsome white stone, built about a court or patio, suggesting, except for its height, a Spanish hacienda, it is known as the handsomest apartment house south of Fifty-ninth street. Eight hundred feet north is the entrance to Central Park.

This apartment of romantic history is known as "A—3"—that is, it is Apartment A, on the third floor. Its windows overlook the ivy-covered gothic sides of Grace Reformed Church. It is high-ceilinged, large-windowed, elegant, yet modern. The advantage of the apartment for housekeeping or courtship can scarcely be excelled. Its rental is $5,000 a year.

But while the apartment is important, the furnishings are at the moment much more important. For the apartment remains intact and desirable, while the furnishings are in a condition deplorable. With eyes alternately flashing and tearful, their owner inspected them when the international courtship had been transferred to Europe, whence it came.

The splendor of the red Louis Quinze drawing-room was sadly dimmed. Its red satin upholstered chairs had been gnawed or shredded, revealing their white lining. The red velvet carpet has irregular white lines and rings never dreamed of in the designer's or manufacturer's concept of that carpet. The cabinet of gold and plate glass is nicked and shabby and has an aspect incomplete, because the elaborately engraved gold knob has been wrenched from it.

To relieve the oppressive richness of red hangings and carpet and chairs there is an exquisite olive and gold chair. In the centre of the seat of this chair is an inkspot, black, uncompromising, inescapable as the black hand itself. The mahogany doors bear on their polished brown surfaces long white lines reaching from the knob to the floor.

"Sabre cuts?" suggested a romantic one, recalling the Prince de Sagan's record as a duellist.

"Possibly," returns the unhappy owner. "But probably they were made by those detestable dogs."

The guest chamber in pale olive and gold looks a bit shabbier than the drawing-room. The carpets are spotted and on the chairs are dark stains as large as a man's palm. Expert cleaners called to appraise the damages, shook their heads at the sight of them.

"Champagne stains," ma'am," they said. "They're hopeless."

So upon the walls appear the stains. From the windows one looks out upon an expanse of city roofs. Here Prince Helle, elderly but ardent suitor, stood with hands behind his back, peering toward that part of the city occupied by the Western Union Building, occupied in Prince Helle's thoughts only by George Gould's offices, by his stern, inscrutable future brother-in-law.

It was in this olive and gold guest chamber the Prince was marooned in those days when newspaper men were in despair because his Highness had "disappeared." A survey of the apartment after the Prince reappeared upon Broadway and Fifth avenue revealed the champagne stains on the chairs.

Down the red length of the mahogany-walled hall the red velvet carpet displayed a white line. It was made by a toy automobile with Fuller Channery as chauffeur and owner. Fuller Channery is the four-year-old nephew and adopted son of Mrs. Tyler Morse, the sub-lessee. The hall Master Fuller deemed an admirable course. He released the clutch and the machine sprinted birdlike across the course.

If the door at the end of the course remained closed there was a sound as of a mighty wreck as the door and the machine collided. Deep dents in the door mark the collision. They are more lasting though less painful than those sustained by Prince de Sagan when he incautiously opened the door while the machine was at its highest speed. The Prince might have used language, powerful and pointed, had not two of his future stepsons been galloping along on canes converted into thundering steeds that added to the impact.

The Prince had promised to be as tender to these children of his Countess as though they were his own, and the eyes of the former Countess Anna were upon him, questioning, weighing, reflecting, and in his office down town George Gould had not yet "made up his mind," so what could Prince Helle do but ruefully smile?

The shelves of the library resembled jaws from which teeth were disfiguringly missing. Valuable books were missing from their places. Servants were vaguely reminiscent about books that had been soiled by children and torn by dogs being carried away with the debris, but they are not sure. The library shelves are still irregular.

High on a fine old rosewood chest of drawers is a torn strip gnawed to the quick of the delicate wood. The imprints of a dog's teeth surround the area of demolition.

"It was the sheepdog. He was awful," exclaimed the neighbors, who shudder in memory of the unearthly howls of the dog by night. "We don't know his name, but we called him the banshee. We were glad when the Tyler Morses took themselves and the banshee and the bull terriers away."

The Supreme Court of New York heard the story. It issued an attachment to Mrs. Amanda C. Thomas, the wife of Herbert Thomas, on the bank account of Tyler Morse. The bank account was said to be with the New York Trust Company. Mrs. Thomas caused the writ of attachment to be served, and the New York Trust Company responded:

"Mr. Morse has no account here."

"The drafts were always drawn against that company. Mr. Morse must have paid the rent out of Mrs. Morse's account," cried the baffled young woman, whose $50,000 flat had gone to the Morse dogs.

What will be the next step? Mrs. Thomas claims $8,000 for the damages to the rugs and carpets, the wall paper and furniture of the apartment. The writ of attachment has been issued. What, she asks, may she attach?

On December 1 Mrs. Thomas, being in ill health and desiring to live quietly, advertised her apartment to let. Mr. and Mrs. Tyler Morse answered the advertisement. Mrs. Morse called to see the apartment.

"It will do nicely," she said at once.

Mrs. Thomas ordered that a lease be drawn up, by which she should clear $400 a month on the cost of the apartment. This Mrs. Morse was willing to pay. The two handsome young women were mutually pleased with their bargain, and with each other.

The Herbert Thomases removed to the Hotel Lorraine. The Tyler Morses took up their residence in the Wyoming. There was mutual satisfaction with the arrangement until Mrs. Thomas moved back to her devastated abode on the heels of the departing sub-lessee, dogs, boy and toy auto.

"If the children and the dogs had had the full run of the house perhaps the damage would not have been so great," sighed one of the six servants, "but children combined with dogs is terrible, especially when the dogs is prize winners."

But what can Mrs. Thomas attach belonging to the Tyler Morses that will offset the result of her flat gone to the dogs?

The Tyler Morses are pursuing their luxurious pleasures themselves and their dogs—elsewhere. They do not appear to be worrying any.

Here Is the Ocean Liner Our Grandchildren Will Travel on if We Progress in the Next One Hundred Years as We Have Since Fulton's First Steamboat in 1807.

IT was just one hundred years ago that Robert Fulton conceived the idea of making a boat go by steam. "Dangerous, hair-brained and impracticable," said the conservative wise-heads of the day, "and nobody will risk his life on a vessel with a roaring furnace in it."

In one hundred years Fulton's first steamboat has developed in every dimension until we have the great ocean liners of to-day. His 130-foot craft has grown to 790 feet; while he triumphantly carried 20 passengers, the Mauretania now carries 3,250, inclusive of the crew, and while the old Fulton astonished the world by creeping at the pitiful pace of five miles an hour, the new fast turbine liners drive through the water at 31 miles an hour.

If we have made such strides since Fulton's first steam vessel, what progress may reasonably be counted on in the coming hundred years? Certainly not less progress. What, then, will be the giant ocean liner of the year 2008, which will take our grandchildren to Europe in 36 hours? On this page is a carefully constructed view of the transatlantic greyhound of a century hence, worked out upon the not unreasonable belief that we shall progress as much in the next hundred years as we have in the last. The following table of comparative figures shows at a glance the past, the present and the dawning future:

Length	130 feet	Length	790 feet	Length	4,800 feet

Engines	Reciprocating	Engines	Turbine	Engines	——— ?

IN a century we have seen the steamboat grow from 130 feet in length to the latest turbine Cunarders, with their 790-foot stretches of deck. Such a growth continued another hundred years would give us a sea monster 4,800 feet long.

But is it probable that this rapid growth will be maintained, or have we reached the limit of bulk? Far from it! The increase in the next two years will be greater than ever, as shown by the recent announcement of the White Star Line that they are about to bulid a thousand-foot boat.

The mammoth steamship is to be launched in 1910. This means an increase of 25 per cent in two years, or the biggest stride in the history of steamships. But, to be conservative, let us assume that the growth for the coming century will be no faster than the last, and let us see what sort of a craft it is reasonable to suppose our great grandchildren will take to cross the ocean in the year 2008.

What, then, will the ocean liner of a hundred years from to-day be like? If history is about to repeat itself and steamships will grow in size in the next century as they have in the last, then finding the magnitude and dimensions of the "Leviathan" of the future is only a matter of simple mathematics.

Too Big to Ever Enter Port.

With each succeeding increase in size and speed has come the opinion from naval engineers that the limit of displacement has been reached—an opinion that has annually been disproved.

Other marine experts believe there is no definite limit to the growth of the ocean ferry. They forecast ships so huge that no one shipyard could build them, or, if built, could launch them. Such a ship would have to be built in sections, perhaps a hundred or more, and put together in the open ocean.

Once put together the "Leviathan" could never put into port unless enormous artificial ports are made for her and anchored in spots where deep water approaches close to the coast.

It is needless to say that at our present stage of progress we could neither build, launch, load, manage nor even prevent such a vessel from going to prompt destruction if it were built.

Perhaps the age of iron sea monsters is almost at an end and will pass as did that of the mighty dinosaurs, whose bones are seen in the museums.

In the year 1807 Robert Fulton launched the Clermont, the first really practical steamboat, and as it splashed its clumsy way up the Hudson River every one agreed that the limit of marine invention had been reached.

The Clermont was 130 feet long, 18 feet wide and was 7 feet high from deck to keel. With everything in her favor and the engines doing their uttermost she was able to travel eight miles an hour. Crew, passengers and all, she accommodated comfortably twenty people. Her displacement was 150 tons. Her average speed was five miles per hour.

The strides of our progress since then are shown by the two Cunard steamers now just getting into their gait of thirty to thirty-one miles an hour, or faster than you usually ride in a train.

From Fulton's modest 130 feet the new ships have grown to 800 feet, from stem to stern, or 790 feet between perpendiculars. The Clermont had 18 feet of beam to compare with the width of the new Cunarders, 88 feet.

Will Be Put Together at Sea.

The little Clermont, drawing only about two feet of water, could have sunk till her deck was covered in only seven feet of water. The huge new Cunarders draw 36½ feet, and are just barely able to squeeze into New York through the new Ambrose Channel.

It would take more than sixty feet of water to submerge one of these monsters to its upper decks. Nowhere in New York Harbor, or for a good distance outside Sandy Hook, is there enough water to hide them.

The Clermont displaced 150 tons of water when she floated, with her full equipment of passengers, coal, water and supplies. To float one of the new turbines, a lake of 10,000 tons has to give up its place. It would take more than 200 Clermonts to displace the same quantity of water.

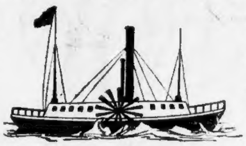
About twenty people found room on board the pioneer steamship when she climbed the Hudson. The captain of the new boats usually has more than 3,250 souls under his care.

In the crude engines built by Watt for the Clermont there is said to have been about 50-horsepower. In the turbines' engine rooms 50-horsepower added or subtracted would never be noticed in the 70,000-horsepower developed by the mighty rotary engines.

If such has been the growth in a century, let us try to imagine what the same progress would give us in another hundred years.

Built in one hundred shipyards, or, perhaps, in one huge yard by a whole city of workers located in Maine, or on the California coast, in some spot where very deep water runs right into the land, this vessel would displace 12,298,000 tons of water.

If man in the next century can build ways that would stand up under the weight of such a ship, so that she could be launched, one could imagine a great tidal wave, caused by the plunge, roaring against the shore, and even almost crossing the ocean.



Fulton's Clermont, Which Ascended the Hudson River at 5 Miles an Hour on Her First Trial 100 Years Ago.

As we have jumped from 130 feet in length to nearly 800 feet during the last hundred years, then a proportionate advance in the next century would give us a length of 4,800 feet, or nearly 480 feet less than a mile. The beam or width to go with this would be 440 feet. This boat dumped in New York City would crush the buildings flat over a space eighteen blocks long and one and a half blocks wide.

Should fire occur on board the "Leviathan," and her captain decide to sink her in shallow water to save her from the flames, the "shallow water" would have to be at least 540 feet deep, and even then the masts, funnels and everything above the top deck would be high and dry.

The great steamer would tower above modern skyscrapers, and even over those of the future, unless they, too, grow almost equally fast. From her keel to her smokestack tops—if she has stacks—will probably be about 1,000 feet. The Singer Building's 612 feet and one inch would look small beside it.

In the bowels of the great ship, hundreds of feet beneath the sea level, would be monster engines of power beyond the mind to grasp. In figures their might is to be estimated at 112,500,000-horsepower. Such engines, properly harnessed, would do the work of an entire nation.

The estimated power of Niagara Falls is only a seventh as much as the "Leviathan" will develop. If every ounce of power in Niagara could be transmitted to the propellers of the big ship it would be just about enough to keep her moving on a nice, quiet day.

The Steamboat of To-day Would Be Capsized by the Mere Passing of One of the Huge Liners of the Year 2008.

What the type of these engines will be, who knows? Steam they certainly will not be. Some think a kind of rotary gas engine will supplant all others. Many engineers believe that a high explosive like nitro-glycerine will be exploded in cylinders, a drop at a time.

Nor is it impossible that the power to drive the engines may be generated ashore and transmitted by cable or even by wireless to the liners. To pull the ships would take more horses than ever existed at one time on the face of the earth. Moreover, loaded on board, they would fill the steamer's vast insides from stem to stern.

In speaking of propellers of the future liner, it must not be understood that the screw of to-day will be used in the next century. Some device which will distribute the power more generally about the vessel will doubtless be employed. Probably every foot of the bottom will grip the water in some way and pull the craft forward.

No less than sixty-four decks should rise one above the other, and they will all be needed, for the great liner, in addition to its enormous freight, will have a large city to house, feed and amuse. There will be between 800,000 and a million to take care of.

With such a large population, all the governing machinery of a city will be essential. There will, of course, be police stations in all parts of the ships, and policemen patrolling day and night. Ambulances, fire departments, detective bureaus, etc., will be permanent fixtures.

But this state of things would doubtless bring about the installation of police courts, with magistrates specially learned in the variety of amphibious law which would apply on such vessels. With these courts would come lawyers, who would attend court and attend to the service of civil papers upon those on board.

Skyscrapers and Railroads on Board.

Civil courts would seem convenient to try short cases before the parties scattered at the end of the voyage. In a central part of the ship, near the courts and the prison, would be the law offices, and with them doubtless most of the doctors, including the big specialists of all kinds, who would find plenty of business among 800,000 people.

The banks and savings institutions would have representatives in the same locality, and the brokers would be there, making a financial centre. The shopping district would also be centrally located. Not only small shops of every sort found on the land, but great department stores would be necessary to handle the business of 800,000 people.

There must needs be entertainment for this city. No evening concerts in the saloon will do for this multitude. There must be many theatres in the ship; in fact, a theatre district. An arena there would doubtless also be, where prize fights or bull fights, if the laws of 2007 permit, will entertain the sporting element.

The motorist and the race horse owner, if willing to pay, could exercise their machines and horses on tracks of ample size inside the "Leviathan." There would be room for grand stands, and admissions to the races could be made to pay for the space occupied by the track. Tennis courts and skating rinks would find their place in the "Leviathan." Gymnasia would keep the passengers from getting flabby during the voyage. Of course, swimming pools, shower baths and Turkish baths would be necessary adjuncts.

The residential sections would run from the bow and stern pretty well into the business section, and would be composed of hotels and apartment houses, interspersed with restaurants, drug stores, groceries and butcher shops. The hotels and restaurants would be of all prices, as in a city, to fit all sizes of pocketbooks.

Saloons would doubtless be found all through this locality in such a ship. Caterers would do a large business in this section, though there would be many apartments and even small houses here with, kitchen and every appliance for those people of wealth who care to take their chef and servants with them.

Quick-lunch counters might be expected to thrive on the various decks of the business section, unless, as is prophesied, improved machinery and business methods, as well as increased respect for digestion, should shorten the business hours of the future and exterminate the quick-lunch industry.

A cross section of the ship, made almost anywhere, would show a telephone exchange, for there would have to be a great many to handle the telephone business of 800,000 people. Messenger boys and telegraph offices would be still more numerous. The offices would send in messages to the central wireless office, where they would be sent out to other ships and to the land.

A large patron of the wireless company would be the newspaper, of which there would necessarily be at least one, and probably more, on board. Great presses and fully equipped newspaper offices would be required to run off the 800,000 copies which would be necessary. It with a Modern Skyscraper and Showing Some of the Activities Which May ng City of the Future.

The Giant Ship of 2008 Will Be 4,800 Feet Long, 440 Feet Wide, Will Carry 800,000 Passengers and 12,298,000 Tons of Cargo, at a Speed of 84 Miles an Hour.

is safe to say that every person on board in the enlightened age one hundred years from now would read at least one newspaper per day.

Libraries would find a place on this floating city of 800,000 souls.

Accidents, births, deaths and sickness would be hourly occurrences on the "Leviathan." Several hospitals would be necessary to take care of the seriously ill, though the death, birth and sickness rate would be smaller in a travelling population than in a city of the same size.

Sea burial is distasteful to [illegible] people and would be unnecessary, for the "Leviathan" would have at least one morgue and several receiving stations where low temperature would be maintained to preserve the bodies until land was reached. Undertakers would be on hand for business, and the death of a friend or relative on the ocean would differ in no way from on the land.

We can imagine milk wagons or milk automobiles, more likely, making their routes before daylight in the streets of the floating city. After them would come the boys with the newspapers and the butcher and the grocer, with various express teams and delivery wagons from the department stores.

Great parks, with shrubs, grass and even small trees, on the top deck would add to the comfort of the passengers. Open-air concerts and open-air theatres would be demanded. Rainy days would find a great circus awning spread to protect from the weather.

Special nurseries for the children below decks to be used in bad weather and sections of the parks set apart for fair weather would be full of nurses, baby carriages and children.

Seasickness would be unknown, except from books that told of the "little 800-foot ocean liners" that were the first to use turbine engines, way back in 1907. No hurricane that ever blew would cause the "Leviathan" to pitch and roll, and there would be no cause for bilge keels on her. She would doubtless bow slowly and majestically to a tidal wave such as is kicked up once in a while by an earthquake.

The Cunard turbines are fitted with elevators to transfer passengers from one to another of her eight decks. The Leviathan would need hundreds of elevators, some of them express elevators and others locals, stopping at every deck, just as there are express and local elevators in the tallest office buildings.

Freight and cattle elevators would be in constant use, even aside from the times of loading and unloading.

Circling the great vessel from stem to stern, electric car lines would be necessary—supposing no better motive power than electricity has been invented by that time. Double tracks would scarcely do the work of transportation, and there would be tracks for freight and passengers on many decks. Mornings and evenings every train would be crowded with people on the way to and from work in the business section, and with shoppers to and from the department store section. After dinner the congestion would be en route to the theatres. Freights would sneak in between times as best they could.

Guided By an Airship Flying Ahead.

The water supply and sewerage system would handle tons of water every few minutes. Huge reservoirs of water would be distilled from the salt water every day, and part of it frozen into ice, part pumped to the hotels, part used to clean the decks and streets, part to water the lawns and trees and supply the swimming pools and [illegible] water for cows on the dairy. A great [illegible] and rows of stalls and many hundreds of cows would supply fresh milk and cream for the wealthy and for the hospitals and the babies.

A slaughter house of vast size would be constantly supplying fresh meat from the cattle yards near by, for the man of the future, it is thought, will demand [illegible] untainted with poisonous preservatives, such as contaminate the beef of the present day and make it possible to send it in moderately cool cars all over the continent and even across the ocean.

The sides of this great vessel would not be very thick above the water line, for it would be constructed on the plan of a building, the weight resting on the cross walls and on great columns and girders.

The bottom, especially near the keel, would have to be of great thickness, and braced and stiffened in ways that would tax the powers of modern engineers to their [illegible] in order to resist the pressure of water at the great depth to which the ship's bottom descends.

An iceberg of no mean proportions would be necessary to crumple in the Leviathan's massive bow. The ship would be unsinkable. Bulkheads would easily localize any leak to so small an area compared with the ship that the trim and speed of the liner would be unaffected.

A modern torpedo boat, if allowed to catch the "Leviathan" and blow half a dozen holes in her side with modern Whitehead torpedoes would not sink her. If no attention were paid to the leaks and no bulkheads closed, save enough to keep the water out of the engines and other vitals of the ship, the continuous inrush of the water would not be enough to sink the vessel during her trip across the sea.

Lifeboats carried on the sixty-fourth deck would be useless in case of a really fatal accident, if such a thing were possible. From the dizzy height of the top deck it would be impossible to launch the thousands of small boats necessary to save the passengers and crew in this manner.

Scores of big, able ships larger than Fulton's Clermont would be held in readiness on one of the decks, not far from the water. These would have some launching device by which they could be vomited into the water to stand by and take off the passengers and such valuables as could be saved.

Some compact but powerful motive power in each vessel, perhaps radium, would send them all flying on their way to port when the last man had left the ship. One would think that the captain of the "Leviathan" would indeed feel like going down with such a ship.

For the repair of the streets a large force of men equal to that of a great city would be constantly employed. Steam rollers, or their equivalent, would be at work constantly, unless there is something of a nature entirely different from asphalt to be discovered in the near future for roads.

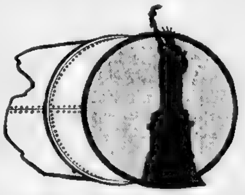
How would this ship dare to proceed in a fog when a ship's length means nearly a mile? What sort of eyes and ears would she need to keep away from sister monsters and icebergs? If the inventors of the next century are unable to dispel fogs by electricity, as is done now in laboratories on a small scale, or by some other method than we can imagine, the great ship would proceed with feelers stretched out miles ahead.

These feelers could be small boats skimming the surface of the water, driven by power conveyed by wires, or very likely wireless, from the mother ship and sending back messages and warnings in regard to the condition of the ocean ahead. The feelers, with their disproportionate power, could dive under or circle around any obstacle they encountered. If the flying machine is ever to be a success it should be long before the year 2008.

Flying machines would make still better feelers, as they would not have to dodge icebergs. Icebergs, however, would hardly be permitted to exist in the year 2008. The evolutionary descendants of the last of the warships might be found in the [illegible] of a fleet of iceberg and derelict hunters, which would attack the bergs and blow them to pieces before they approached the paths of commerce.

At a signal from the feelers the "Leviathan" could be stopped in less time than a modern ocean liner by some device such as has been more than once suggested. Fan-shaped wings released from the bottom would grasp cubic acres of water and arrest all motion.

Increased speed of the motor craft after the death of sailing ships, which many say is even now in sight, will make traffic regulations necessary over the high seas. Just as policemen in the crowded streets of big cities keep the streams of traffic separate and arrest every driver who refuses to keep in his own "lane" so there will be international police boats or flying machines watching each ship and warning the captains of any that stray a half mile off their course.



The Statue of Liberty Could Be Placed in One of the Future Liner's Smokestacks.

When the great liner gets into her stride she will plow along at 192 miles an hour. This speed will be maintained only in midocean. When leaving one continent or approaching another the rate must necessarily be cut down to about the speed of a modern automobile.

The reason for this is the enormous multiplication of ships which will be necessary to do the freight and passenger business of the world when it is 100 years older.

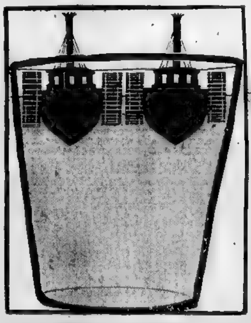
The seas for several hundred miles outside of the big ports must needs be black with shipping coming and going. High speed in this fleet would be impossible.

During the hours when it is safe to let the great ship do her best it is certain that protection from the air will be necessary to save life and limb and property on board.

Nobody can stand up in the face of a 192-mile-an-hour gale. It would knock a person down, tear the breath out of his lungs and crush him against the nearest fixture if it didn't carry him overboard altogether. Doubtless there will be a great steel windshield in the bow rising above everything else.

In this shield will be a conning tower with heavy plate glass sides, through which the captain and the man at the wheel or lever or whatever may take the place of the wheel will peer. Through the plate glass, too, several telescopes will project. A man will have his eye at each of these telescopes, sweeping the horizon for possible dangers overlooked by the feelers.

The captain warned of something dangerous on the horizon ahead would just have enough time to steer out of its way and no more. The plate glass will need to be stout enough not only to resist air pressure and hail of 192 miles an hour but to stand the shock of an occasional seagull.



The Quantity of Water, Wines and Other Drinkables Carried in the "Leviathan" of 2008 Would Float a Couple of the Ferry-boats of To-day.

If the Cunard Steamship Company should launch a ship like the "Leviathan" next year, our minds would surely be better prepared for the astonishing sight than were the good people of New York State when Fulton, in the Clermont, first steamed up to Albany.

After no end of ridicule and opposition to his "preposterous" scheme, in which no conservative man would invest his capital, Fulton began to build his boat in New York in 1806. With him was associated Chancellor Livingstone, of New York City, who had made an unsuccessful attempt at steam navigation.

People came from long distances to look at the "fool boat," with its two small masts and the great open space amidships for the engine. At last Watt had the two-cylinder engines ready, and they were installed. The crowd thought the machinery a joke, too, though many of them had seen another of Watt's engines working day and night raising the water in the reservoir back of the almshouse in New York City.

Then the steam exhaust pipe and the smokestack as high as the little masts were set up, and the strange paddle wheels rigged.

At last Fulton got up steam one night, and in the gray of dawn sneaked out for a trial spin. The ship answered her helm, moved steadily against wind and tide, and, with the exception of a few minor defects in the engines, equalled all his expectations.

"John, Wilt Thee Risk Thy Life?"

Watt readjusted the engines, and Fulton announced that he was ready to take passengers to Albany. The papers printed his announcement. Those who read it wondered if any one could be induced to go.

But a few were willing to take the risk. Fulton, standing near the gangplank, saw a young man approach with a travelling bag.

An elderly gentleman seized the young man's arm and said:

"John, wilt thee risk thy life in such a concern? I tell thee she is the most fearful wild fowl living, and thy father ought to restrain thee!"

The young man was not persuaded, however, and took one of the twelve berths for the trip to Albany. The other berths were all filled, and crew, passengers and all, about twenty men sailed on that memorable trip.

The wharves, piers and house tops were all crowded early that Friday morning to see the attempt.

All the machinery was exposed to view. As the first paddles hesitatingly churned the water, and the two cylinders worked with much coughing and pounding the vessel moved from the dock. The cylinders and every valve and joint leaked steam in puffs and jets, and the spectators heard the clanking and rattling of the engine as long as it was in sight.

The whole city of New York seemed to join in the cheer as the Clermont turned up the river and was fairly under way. Fulton did not join in the answering cheer of his shipmates, for his anxious eyes were on the laboring engines.

As the boat steamed by West Point the entire population turned out and saluted. All Newburg and Fishkill were out to see the wonderful spectacle.

In a letter to his friend and financial supporter, Mr. Barlow, Fulton says of his trial trip:

"My steamboat voyage to Albany and back has turned out rather more favorably than I had calculated. The distance to Albany is 150 miles. I ran up in thirty-two hours, and down in thirty. The latter is just five miles an hour.

"I had a light breeze against me the whole day going and coming, so that no use was made of my sails, and this voyage has been performed wholly by the power of the steam engine.

"I overtook many sloops and schooners beating to windward, and passed them as if they had been at anchor."

Such was the modest description of this, the greatest of American inventions.

Fulton's First Real Passenger.

The first passenger who ever paid a fare on a steamboat paid it into the hands of Robert Fulton at Albany just before the return to New York. He described the scene as follows:

"I chanced to be in Albany on business when Fulton arrived there in his unheard-of craft, which every one felt such anxiety to see. Being ready to leave and hearing that this craft was going to return to New York, I repaired on board and inquired for Mr. Fulton. I was referred to the cabin and there found a plain gentlemanly man, wholly alone and engaged in writing.

"'Mr. Fulton, I presume.'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'We shall try to get back, sir.'

"'Can I have a passage down?'

"'You can take your chance with us, sir.'

"I inquired the amount to be paid, and, after a moment's hesitation, he named a sum, I think, of $6 or $7. The amount in coin I laid in his open hand, and, with his eyes fixed upon it, he remained motionless so long that I supposed it might be a miscount and said to him, 'Is that right, sir?'

"This question aroused him from a kind of reverie, and as he looked up a big tear was brimming in his eye, and his voice faltered as he said:

"'Excuse me, sir, but my memory was busy as I contemplated this, the first pecuniary reward I have ever received for all my exertions in adapting steam to navigation. I should gladly commemorate the occasion over a bottle of wine with you, but really I am too poor even for that just now; yet I trust that we may meet again, when this will not be the case.'

"Some four years after this, when the Clermont was greatly improved and her name changed to the North River, and when two other boats, the Car of Neptune and the Paragon had been built, making Mr. Fulton's fleet consist of three boats, plying regularly between New York and Albany, I took passage on one of these for the latter city.

"The cabin in that day was below, and as I walked its length to and fro I saw I was very closely observed by one I supposed a stranger. Soon, however, I recalled the features of Mr. Fulton, but without disclosing this I continued my walk. At length, in passing his seat, our eyes met, when he sprang to his feet and, eagerly seizing my hand, exclaimed:

"'I knew it must be you, for your features have never escaped me, and although I am still far from rich, yet I may venture that bottle now!'

"It was ordered, and during its discussion Mr. Fulton said:

"'The incident of our first interview at Albany was the turning point in my destiny; for it was the first actual recognition of my usefulness to my fellow-men.'"

Looking Down the Throat with the Laryngoscope.

DOWN your throat, back of your 'Adam's Apple,' lies the main secret of the most wonderful musical instrument in existence, a delicate bit of nature's mechanism which enables you to accomplish with a single 'pipe' infinitely more than two or three dozen of a church organ's pipes can do, except in combination.

A woman sings. The notes pour forth from her throat in an entrancing melody. No artificial instrument can compare in musical effectiveness with the apparatus she employs. Yet that apparatus is one of extreme simplicity. But the player? Ah, there is the secret! It is the woman's soul that plays the instrument.

Considered merely as a mechanical contrivance, it is sufficiently marvellous. Yet it is only recently that science has found out how it really works—discovery on the subject being attributable mainly to the invention of certain ingenious devices for looking into the throat and the cavities behind the face.

Anatomists [illegible] decided that the human voice considered [illegible] musical instrument, may be compared most appropriately to a church organ. It is like the organ, a wind instrument. The lungs are its bellows, furnishing the requisite air blast. The vocal cords correspond to the vibrating tongue of the organ. The mouth, the nasal passages, and the box-like cavity behind them called the "pharynx" do duty in lieu of a sounding board.

The simplicity of the apparatus, mechanically speaking, is, at the same time, one of its most remarkable features. Though the mystery behind it—the psychic mystery of the hidden player—must remain forever undisclosed, the details of the construction of the instrument are perfectly understood. Thanks to recent discovery, also, knowledge of the way in which it works when in operation is now practically complete.

Odd though it may seem, up to a short time ago nobody had ever beheld the voice box—the sound producing organ—of a living person. The reason [illegible] is merely that nobody [illegible] own his own or anybody else's throat. Accordingly, not one in [illegible] its manner of working were pure guesses. Nowadays, however, with the help of a contrivance called a laryngoscope, the whole apparatus can be viewed at leisure.

One day, not many years ago, a celebrated European singer and teacher of singing named Manuel Garcia was trying to look into his throat after this fashion. He wanted to see his own larynx, or voice box, in operation. The effort was by no means successful. But finally, after puzzling over the problem for a while he hit upon an entirely new and very ingenious idea. He fastened a little disk-shaped mirror on the end of a stick a foot long and thrust it into his mouth in such a way as to place it beneath the uvula. Then, with the help of an ordinary hand mirror he threw a reflected beam of sunlight upon the little mirror.

Eureka! The discovery long sought in vain by scientists, was made at last. For the first time a living larynx was disclosed to the human eye. Not only this but Garcia could actually see himself sing. The working of the voice box in veritable operation was made manifest.

Later on a scientific man named Czermak, who was Professor of Physiology at Pesth, improved upon the invention by using for the purpose a concave mirror to concentrate the light thrown into the larynx. He went to Paris and here exhibited his own voice-box before learned societies, to their very great astonishment. The instrument, with slight modifications, developed into the "laryngoscope," which is to-day in common use by physicians who make the treatment of diseases of the throat a specialty.

The larynx is at the upper end of the windpipe. It is a wedge-shaped box, lined with a continuation of the same mucous membrane that lines the mouth. It has two lips of fibrous tissue, called vocal cords, which are controlled by special muscles. As these lips are elongated, shortened, or made tense, they vibrate in various ways, with corresponding differences in the sounds produced.

The upper part of the larynx opens directly into the back of the mouth. In front of it is a V-shaped plate of cartilage, with the point of the V turned forward, the projection forming what is known as the "Adam's apple"—an unbeautiful prominence that in women is fortunately so [illegible]. A woman's voice box is smaller than a man's, and its muscles are weaker; hence the higher and sharper tones of the instrument.

A well-developed larynx means a strong and deep voice. At the period when childhood merges into adolescence (about fourteen years of age in boys) the voice-box of the male human being undergoes a great enlargement. At this time it is that the voice is said to "change." It does, in fact, alter radically, owing to the cause mentioned, becoming much deeper—that is to say, of lower pitch—and more sonorous.

The space between the two vocal cords is called the "glottis." It is triangular when the throat is in repose, but varies constantly in form and size with the breathing and the emission of the voice. Each of the vocal cords—or lips, as they might properly be termed—has one free edge, and in vibrating they act much like "reeds" in certain musical instruments. In fact, the "glottis," with its two vibrating lips, corresponds pretty well with the familiar double reed of the hautboy.

Now, the human face might be compared to a mask. It is in truth the mask of the skull, and behind it are great cavities—the nasal passages, the mouth and the box-like space in the rear, called the "pharynx." These serve as resonating cavities, modifying and rendering sonorous the sounds that issue from the throat. But there are also many hollow spaces in the bones of the face, all of which communicate directly or indirectly with the nasal passages, and which serve as supplementary resonators.

It will thus be understood how the air from the lungs, thrown in a blast through the windpipe, strikes the vocal cords, causes them to vibrate as it rushes out, and, reverberating from the roof of the mouth and the nasal passages, issues from the lips as sound. This sound is modulated in ways infinitely diverse by changes in the shape of the mouth effected by the muscles controlling the cheeks and lips. The tongue, too, plays its part, and so likewise does the soft palate.

The tonguelike "uvula" has already been spoken of as an appendage of the soft palate which hangs down into the back of the mouth. This palate can be drawn up and back until it shuts off the nasal passages from the throat. You can close it at will. Say the word "ebb" and it shuts. But so long as you hold it in this position you cannot say the letters M or N. Try it for yourself, and you will find it rather curious. If you have a dose of disagreeable medicine to take, say "ebb" and you will hardly taste it—the reason why being simply that the perception of flavor depends largely upon the olfactory sense, which is cut off by the means described.

It ought to be made clear that what we call the voice is produced wholly and exclusively by the larynx at the upper end of the windpipe. If this little box were removed from your throat you would be dumb. All the lungs do is to furnish the wind, and the windpipe is useful only to carry the current of air through the voice box—so far as the production of vocal sounds is concerned. As for the cavities behind the mask of the face, they do nothing but modify the sound that issues from the larynx.

In a church organ there are a great number of pipes for the production of different sounds. The voice, on the other hand, has only one pipe, but this pipe is susceptible of innumerable modifications. It is operated, or played upon, through the sympathetic nervous system. The player, it might be said, is none other than the soul itself. For the song of the singer is not a product of thinking, but of feeling; it is an expression of the spirituality, and not of the intellect.

The human voice is a wind instrument in three parts—first, the bellows (or lungs); second, the cords which by vibration produce sounds, and third, the resonance apparatus. The first regulates the loudness of the sound, which depends upon the amount of air forced through the windpipe; the second determines the pitch, whether lower or higher, and the third makes the quality, or "timbre." It is by the "timbre," as the French call it, that we are able to distinguish the voice of one person from that of another.

As the space between the two vocal cords is more or less narrowed, and the cords themselves more or less tense, the sounds produced are either grave or sharp. We have our own vocal cords under such perfect control, through the muscles provided for that purpose, that we are able at will to govern their vibrations within certain limits. For a low note in the bass they may vibrate fifty times a second, while the highest note in the register of a soprano singer may run up nearly to 2,000 vibrations per second.

That powerful vocal musical tones depend for their production wholly upon the resonating cavities was proved by a very interesting experiment of the famous physicist Helmholz. You can try it for yourself, if you wish. Open your mouth and adjust your lips for the pronunciation of a given vowel, but without uttering the slightest sound. Then hold a vibrating tuning fork in front of your lips, and it will produce the sound of the vowel.

No artificial musical contrivance will ever be produced that can compare with the human voice. The latter must always remain the instrument of instruments, because it is a medium of expression for that mysterious tenant of the corporeal domicile which is supposed to represent the immortal part of us. This is the unrivalled player whose notes, modulated to express every shade of thought, of feeling and of passion, translate into melodious sound all that is in us of the divine.

Two Paris Beauties in a Real Duel Just Like Men.

"Pronounced the wound not dangerous."

Paris, June 6.

PERHAPS the triumphant march of the Suffragettes in London is responsible; at any rate, affairs of honor between [illegible] Paris are growing more serious [illegible].

The latest [illegible] French capital is a [illegible] who were as [illegible] according to the details of [illegible] ants of [illegible] crossed swords. A bit of gossip led to this sanguine outcome, for it was carried on until one of the women was actually wounded.

Here are the [illegible] of the duello as they were [illegible] and signed by the [illegible].

In consequence of [illegible] growing out of matters [illegible] Mlle. de Navias [illegible] seconds Mmes. de S[illegible] to Mme. Andree d'Alaza to ask an apology or satisfaction from her [illegible] recourse to ar[illegible].

Mme. d'Alaza, after consulting with her representatives, Mme. [illegible] and B[illegible], refused to retract anything.

A duel was thereupon decided upon after [illegible] among the [illegible] seconds. The following conditions were agreed [illegible] the duel:

1—Mlle. de Navias is recognized [illegible].

2—The [illegible] chosen is the regulation [illegible].

3—[illegible] and [illegible] are the rest [illegible].

4—A space of [illegible] metre (18 yards) [illegible] of ground [illegible] allowed [illegible] of the [illegible].

5—Each [illegible] to last two minutes with [illegible] intervals of rest.

6—[illegible] are forbidden as well as the use of the free [illegible].

7—The duel shall cease upon the order of the seconds following their consultation with the physicians in attendance.

By common agreement M. del Prat [illegible] chosen to direct the duel, which shall take place in the outskirts of Paris the 28th of May, 1908.

These rules were rigidly enforced by the seconds and by M. del Prat. The duel took place as arranged, in the Parc de [illegible], at Ville d'Avray, a suburb of Paris, and it was a spirited encounter.

The contestants arrived in the park [illegible] seconds shortly after dawn.

They stripped off their coats and waists on either side of a grassy enclosure, while the physicians took the rapiers from their cases and dipped them in an anti-septic solution.

[illegible] hand, the two women [illegible] each other. Both were [illegible] the bitterness between them [illegible] to be seen. They [illegible] at each other but struck each other's guard [illegible] the word to begin was given by M. del Prat.

For the first two minutes neither gave [illegible]. The two women [illegible] savagely and [illegible] at the expiration of the period for the first engagement [illegible] other and neither giving ground.

The third bout with the swords proved [illegible] Mlle. de Navias "rushed" her [illegible] and the latter cried out that she was [illegible]. Her seconds ran up to her and she fell into their arms. Mme. d'Alaza had been wounded in the right shoulder. Physicians examined the wound and pronounced it not dangerous, but Mme. d'Alaza was too weak to go on with the duel.

Nevertheless Mme. d'Alaza refused to make any apology to Mlle. de Navias and the latter left the field compelled to accept as sufficient satisfaction her having wounded her adversary. The result of the duel was stated in a paper drawn up and signed by the seconds and by the physicians.

Every now [illegible] of life in Paris is enhanced [illegible] of these affairs of honor between fair ladies. Less than a year ago [illegible] and popular actresses, Mlle. [illegible] Barri and Mlle. Renee de [illegible], fought with rapiers because [illegible] publicly stated that the [illegible] figure that resembled a sausage [illegible] the middle.

Each of the duelling ladies wore a short skirt and a gauze shirt waist so thin that [illegible] could be seen.

After a few [illegible] Mlle. du Barri perceived a pink spot over the heart of her adversary. [illegible] a death stroke. The remorseful [illegible] swooned.

Mlle. de la Chapelle was [illegible] pink spot had been there since the hour of [illegible] she had felt the [illegible] and when Mlle. du Barri fainted she fai[illegible].

When consciousness was restored [illegible] into each other's arms, sworn friends, and then the whole party [illegible] seconds and surgeons, adjourned to a restaurant for the gayest and most [illegible] breakfast in their lifetime.

Mr. Roosevelt's Cousin—Boston's "Bachelor Maid."

"O" Lorna Doone! Lorna Doone!" sighed a pretty, pink cheeked girl of twenty, tossing her head impatiently upon her pillow and giving the pillow an angry punch.

The pretty girl was not apostrophizing the unhappy heroine of [illegible] Blackmore's novel. Her [illegible] were [illegible] a [illegible] patent [illegible] over field, a gray mare with delicate, sensitive nose, and legs tapering in an exquisite shapeliness, and eyes—there lay the trouble.

"I shouldn't have trusted Lorna Doone's eyes," moaned the girl, giving the pillow another punch. "I noticed that they were too bright and shifty. I might have known that she was tricky. But I liked her legs. I thought I could train her to outrun any horse in Boston." Then comes the family physician, taking note of his patient's pink cheeks and [illegible] eyes. He admonishes her:

"My dear Miss Roosevelt, I must tell you again that you must lie still, absolutely still. A broken leg is [illegible] broken in two pieces is [illegible]. You do not wish to limp through life, I take it."

"But, doctor, it is hard for a girl who loves the open as I do to lie here." Her tone was pathetic. If Katherine Roosevelt were not an athletic girl and athletes were not always brave, her tone might have been mistaken for a whimper.

"I know—I know." The man of medicine nodded. "Nurse, take down the curtains. Let the patient look out at the cloverfield. There, is that better?"

The girl with the brown hair and pink cheeks nodded and smiled. Her eyes sought among the sleek coated horses in the red and white dotted field for a spot of gray. When they found it she smiled and sighed again, "Oh, Lorna Doone!"

Then the girl proved herself a doughty philosopher. "Anyway we won the yellow ribbon," she said and smiled, forgiveness in her eyes.

Miss Roosevelt Taking a Fence, and Mounted on Lorna Doone, the Horse That Threw Her.

Last month Lorna Doone threw and nearly killed [illegible] Auspiciously began the day that nearly ended in death. It was the day of the Brookline Country Club Horse show on May 23. Miss Katherine Roosevelt, the cousin of the President, cantered about the ring a svelte, charming figure in blue with pot hat, on the mare whose coat shone in the sunshine with the gleam of silver. Everyone admired the modern Centaur, the beautiful girl mounted upon a beautiful horse. Every one included the judges, for they tied upon the mare's bridle, while the mare's mistress blushed delightfully, a yellow ribbon. It was the prize in the ladies' saddle class.

But that afternoon Katherine Roosevelt, mounted upon Lorna Doone, made another entry. This was for the high jumping class. Cheers rang from the grandstand when Lorna Doone and her rider crossed the green sward, a flash of silver and blue. The cheers rose to a sort of triumph when Lorna Doone magnificently took the first hurdle, spurning it haughtily with her small up-flying hind feet. A dash, a leap and the second was taken more brilliantly than the first. The third was left behind and the gallant little mare leaped for the fourth. Then, instead of cheers, there were bated breaths. Instead of hands waving handkerchiefed enthusiasm there was silence. Every face paled. The next instant persons poured from the grandstand and ran across the gold flecked greensward.

Katherine Roosevelt lay unconscious. The mare that had fallen across her was being half lifted, half driven to its feet. Lorna Doone's nerve, they said, had failed her at the fourth hurdle. She had turned sidewise. Her feet had caught in the rails. Struggling thus she had thrown Miss Roosevelt over her head. Falling forward she had crushed the girl's ankle.

"Katherine's life was saved by a miracle," sobbed her mother, Mrs. J. T. Bowlker.

When Miss Roosevelt recovered consciousness orders were given that she be taken to her mother's home on Beacon street. "No, I want to go to my own home," she urged, and she was driven to the ancient white farmhouse which [illegible] she prefers to her mother's house in Boston. It is in the heart of a dense wood two and a half miles from Millis, secluded from the world, without even a telephone.

"Don't bother," she said. "Is Lorna Doone alive?"

"Yes, she wasn't injured, only frightened."

"Good! Poor old girl!"

A tear trickled down the cheeks. Gratitude that her pet lived caused a display of feeling the doctors who set the broken ankle could not wring from her.

And [illegible] is quite content since the curtains have been taken down in her rooms so that she may gaze her fill at the sleek coated, spirited creatures afield in the pink and white clover. Once Lorna Doone was brought to the open window. The sick girl's couch was wheeled close to it. A slim gray head was thrust within and the girl's white hand patted it.

"Oh, Lorna Doone," she said forgivingly. The horse whinnied wistful apology.

Katherine Roosevelt made her debut in the exclusive Back Bay set two years ago. The Back Bay set was pleased. It said "Katherine Roosevelt is charming—so original, so witty, withal so kindly." But Miss Roosevelt was not pleased. Her first season was one of muffled protest. Her second one of open revolt.

"Society? What is it? Why should any one care for it? I don't. I mean to have a farm and raise horses." Her fashionable mother, at first amazed, became gradually reconciled.

"Katherine loathes society. She is far happier hunting foxes and managing her farm than she would be at teas and balls. So there is nothing to be done but live her life as she wishes to live it." This was her [illegible].

"I [illegible] like Aunt Amy [illegible]. I won't be [illegible] as Aunt Amy is," was Miss Katherine Roosevelt's ultimatum.

Miss Roosevelt's Aunt Amy is Miss [illegible], one of the wealthiest of [illegible]. Miss Katherine Roosevelt [illegible] to live a "business life" [illegible] Aunt Amy is happy though single. "Why shouldn't I be?"

Earning Their Dowries So Men Can Afford to Marry Them.

AN American girl is organizing a Dot Society. Believing that the French system of providing a girl with a dowry encourages matrimony, an institution whose popularity is at least not growing in the United States, she has formed a club of working girls who intend to earn their own dot.

Miss Albia Nowlin Brown has acquired an acre of land at Northport, a secluded Summer resort on the shore of Long Island Sound. The young women who compose the Dot Society will erect a house on the ground and live there for the Summer months at least, perhaps throughout the year, until well, until the dot has been provided and they are married. The weddings will take place from the Dot House, and the dot itself will be paid over to the young man who wins the bride and with her enough money to begin housekeeping in a modest, comfortable way. It is the most practicable of any of the plans to make marriage easier at a time when there is an appalling indifference to it, especially on the part of young men, thinks the president of the Dot Society, who here unfolds her plan.

By ALBIA NOWLIN BROWN.

We have organized the Dot Society to [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] style a great and growing [illegible].

There are far fewer marriages this generation [illegible] What [illegible] in a country where marriage is [illegible] a dead letter? We would be [illegible] savages. If any of us should live [illegible] over as it were upon that generation [illegible] white haired old men and women we would be ashamed that in our youth we had done nothing to prevent such a state. I at least do not propose to have such cause for shame. For years I have been studying this subject. I find that all women [illegible] women and girlish girls are willing to marry.

I have no interest in mannish women or in boyish girls. One can tell at a glance that they don't wish to marry. The [illegible] lies chiefly with the young men who [illegible] with [illegible] honesty, that the reason they do not marry is that girls are [illegible] and that it costs more than [illegible] can afford to begin housekeeping.

In France no man makes such excuse for not marrying, because there is no reason. Every young girl of marriageable age has her dowry, even though small. She has enough "laid by" to begin housekeeping. [illegible] parents begin saving for a daughter's dot as soon as she is born. By the time she is eighteen years old, if they have only succeeded in saving [illegible] a year they have a snug sum [illegible] as a home [illegible] In [illegible] opinion, American parents should [illegible] that they are less wise than French parents, because they indulge [illegible] present whims when the French father and mother teach it economy [illegible]

When [illegible] New York [illegible] working girls in the metropolis earn from [illegible] twelve or at most fifteen dollars a week. [illegible] to do was to support themselves and perhaps contribute a little to the support of the family. [illegible] pay her [illegible] the money [illegible] save their dowries. I saw that there was but one thing to do: earn them by extra work.

So with Miss Charlotte M. Robson of Boston and Miss Louise [illegible] of Philadelphia, and other friends, I have inaugurated the Dot Society. There will be twenty girls in the society. We have decided to limit the number to that because a larger number would make the association unwieldy.

Our purpose is to provide ways and means for a girl to earn her own dot. It will be done at the Dot Home at Northport, Long Island. There are a dozen ways. I already have an order from a dealer for all the squab we can raise. The same dealer has given us an order for twenty chickens a week. We can raise ducks, the Long Island duckling known to [illegible] epicures, and they always bring a good price. We can raise berries and vegetables. We can provide honey, mushrooms and flowers for the market. Each girl can [illegible] she can do best. One of the girls embroiders well and swiftly. She can sit on the veranda, enjoying the ozone, and embroider all day. Think how much she could earn in a Summer. One girl, a stenographer, makes excellent copies of books and plays. She could earn a great deal for the [illegible] extra rooms [illegible] with [illegible] as for [illegible] Summer vacations. We would keep no servants. The girls could take turns at managing the house and doing the housework. The sum of the earnings of Dot House would be placed in savings banks where it would draw four per cent interest, which of course, each six months would be compounded.

By the [illegible] first [illegible] we would have the amount [illegible] for and [illegible] in their [illegible] We would [illegible] girls [illegible] had not yet [illegible] And we [illegible] make a provision that no girl shall be married for six months or at least a quarter after the opening of the Dot Home. We think we will do incalculable good. We know we can make the Dot Society achieve its purpose of giving a dowry to the members of it who marry. Personally I don't expect to wed. Perhaps other girls will not do so. But the majority of them undoubtedly will. We will live simply, eat plain but good food, wear simple clothing, banish all the non-essentials.

Not only will we give our members who marry a good start in life, but the fact that they begin life without any immediate worries about household expenses will make their chances for happiness greater. The constant strain of meeting bills and the possible failure to do so make people's nerves ragged. Irritation, harsh words, estrangement follow, and then the divorce courts.

THE MAN WHO STOLE THE EARTH

Most Thrilling Novel of Love and Adventure Since Jules Verne's Masterpiece.

By W. Holt White.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

The King of Balkania, who has a place at Cookham-on-Thames, where he is known as Mr. Montgomery Jones, is shot at from a launch by an emissary of his enemy, the King of the Sylvanians. Mr. Jones escapes, and himself shoots one of the men in the launch. The affair is witnessed by John Strong, son of Sir John Strong, who comes across the river [illegible] a ship invention of his friend, Joe Langley, and wonders how he can utilize it to win the Princess Diana. Strong asks Mr. Jones for the Princess's hand, and tells him how, by means of Langley's airship, he means to become master of the earth. The King "calls his bluff." Strong then enlists the airship inventor, Joe Langley, in the great enterprise of winning the King's daughter.

Strong manages to keep a dangerous tryst with the King's daughter, during which he discovers that his enemies have set fire to the airship shed. In rushing to the rescue he is set upon by the King's minions and nearly killed. But he saves his own and his precious possession by sheer luck.

Strong leaves his bungalow in charge of his old chum, Beningham, and takes the "Di" up the river to Oxford, where he plans to secrete her, his enlisting the co-operation of Arbuthnot—another college chum—and planning a larger airship.

Determined to see Diana again before breaking with civilization, Strong induces O'Gorman, a detective friend, to take him as an assistant to the King's London house, where a grand reception is being given. There he finds himself in the Princess's presence. He tells Diana that with his new airship he is about to go to Balkania and [illegible] Bomberg, its capital city, as a preliminary to "stealing the earth." He will hand back her Kingdom in exchange for her heart. Diana sends him away, warning him that the King may [illegible] him in the house.

Strong is trapped. The King conducts him to an upper room where, refusing to tell his secret, he is [illegible] guard to drink [illegible] he escapes to [illegible] rescued by Langley and the "Di."

"YOU will go to Oxford," said Arbuthnot under his breath, "so will I, and your car will have to go a pretty good pace if I am left far behind.

"Hurry up, [illegible] man," he cried across the room; "slip into your clothes and let's get away. This looks to me like mischief, and although Strong can be trusted to look after himself, I had just as soon be at Oxford when his Majesty arrives."

In ten minutes the two men had thrown on their clothes, collected their papers and the other articles which Strong had instructed them to carry away with them, and had got their own car on to the road.

But Ludwig, urged to as great a speed as he could contrive by the King, had secured a good start.

It was 7 o'clock when they reached Oxford and pulled up at the Mitre Hotel. The King got down, and in the office registered his name as Mr. Montgomery Jones.

Then he turned about only to meet Strong, fresh and bright as the morning, coming down the stairs.

He came over to the King, and smiled down at him.

"Apparently I have a sort of fascination for you," he said. "really I didn't expect to have the pleasure of seeing you again so soon."

There were several servants busy in the hallway, and so the King pointed to the open door of the coffee room. "If you will do me the kindness to give me five minutes," he said in a low voice, "I think that you and I may come to a better understanding."

"Possibly you do," said Strong, "but I regret that it is now too late."

The King searched Strong's face through his glasses.

"You really mean that?" he asked.

"I really mean it," said Strong.

"But the Princess Diana ——"

"I don't wish to discuss any affairs of mine with you," said Strong, "nor any affairs of the Princess Diana. Diana, I am glad to inform you, has promised conditionally to marry me. The condition will shortly be fulfilled, and I believe that I am justified in saying that the wedding will take place within six months."

The King's Daughter Disobeys Him.

THE King stood and watched Strong mounting up the stairs.

He was a reader of men and he knew well enough from Strong's gait and the determined thrust of his shoulders that he had made up his mind. He knew it as well as though he were still gazing into Strong's resolute face.

So he turned away with a shrug and a little sigh, and made for the door. For the first time in his life he felt uneasy as to the issue of events.

His rage, however, had entirely passed and left him prepared to deal as deliberately and unscrupulously with the problem before him as even he could desire.

Ludwig saw the change of mood in his face, and guessed that they were about to return to London. He recognized that the wild mission to Oxford had failed.

"We will get back," said the King quietly and almost affably as he looked into the car, "and the faster the speed you can make [illegible] the better pleased. There is [illegible] to do before we start for Bomberg to-night. To begin with, I propose to have you properly affianced to the Princess Diana. With a man like Strong about there is no time to be lost."

Ludwig smiled one of his poor, sickly smiles [illegible] the steering wheel. It seemed that all his strength and understanding and intelligence were wrapped up in his driving.

He could have turned and begged for further information on the King's good news. But the speed of the car prevented that.

When they reached London by way of Hammersmith the newsboys were screeching their news and, slowing down, the King caught sight of a placard which read, "Mysterious airship seen over London." He motioned to Ludwig to stop the car, and then bought a paper.

The car jumped on. Between the bumping and amid the rattle the King of Balkania read most unwelcome news.

First there was the astonishing story of the constable whose amazed face he had seen beneath the tower of his house in Park street.

He wondered how the news of the constable's vision could have leaked out so soon. He reflected that the ways of the apparently simple minded [illegible] of Scotland Yard were by no means so simple as their looks, and that in view of the incidents of the Frenches during the past few days and the fact that [illegible] was witnessed outside the King of Balkania's house, they might well indulge in a little convenient publicity in order not merely to disturb his Majesty himself, but in order to [illegible] the news.

But what brought the King's heart well nigh into his mouth, and the thought, quick as a flash, that he had been very near to and just missed the object of his run to Oxford, was a wire from a correspondent in the university town giving a ploughman's story of a silver airship which had swooped, as far as he could see, into the river just outside the city.

All this gave the King considerable food for thought, and urged the necessity of immediate departure for Balkania where he would be beyond the possibility of [illegible]. But the fact that an airship, a real, working airship had made sudden and mysterious appearances by night was now public property to some extent consoled him.

It would make Strong's task of keeping his secret to himself practically impossible. It would place the authorities on the qui vive, and the watchful eyes of the secret police of all the world would soon be directed upon Strong.

It meant [illegible] that things must soon come to a head, and he realized that Strong, as an Englishman, would be under the necessity of placing his secret at the disposal of his own country, and therefore he reflected further that though he [illegible] the use of the airship himself it would at least never be employed against him.

But even men as astute as the King of Balkania make mistakes in their calculations, not even the King could conceive the astonishing audacity of the scheme with which Strong replied to the unlooked for and unwelcome publicity.

It was, therefore, with considerable weight lifted from his mind that the King entered his house in Park street on the eve of his departure. He went straight to his own room and ordered Prince Ludwig to accompany him. He seated himself at his desk with the air of a business man about to commence a business transaction.

On his way through the hall he had sent a servant to request the presence of Diana.

Diana came into the room with interrogation in her eyes. Beloved as she was of all her father's servants, even the most [illegible] of them, the news of the night before had reached her early, and her heart rejoiced at the escape of Strong.

But after this she had learned of her father's departure for Oxford, and that anxiety which now seemed to have become part of her life settled down on her again.

Anxiety was a new sensation to Diana, and she had not become sufficiently used to it to laugh it away. In the months that were to come she learned that anxiety is merely the beginning of fear, and, like fear, a thing to be [illegible] aside.

This, however, was a lesson which she had not yet learned, and the forbidding calm of her father as she entered the room, coupled with the presence of Ludwig, made her realize that she had been summoned, not on a mission of peace, but one of battle.

She went over to her father's table and, leaning across it, looked at him intently. He returned her gaze steadily through his glasses, and asked her to be seated.

Then he cleared his throat with a little affectation which he assumed in trying moments.

"To-night, my dear," he said to Diana, "we leave for Bomberg. That, I believe, you already know.

"But before our departure it will be necessary for you and Prince Ludwig and myself to transact a little piece of business in which we are intimately concerned.

"That piece of business, I may say, is the formal affiancing of yourself to Prince Ludwig of the Sylvanians."

Diana, true to herself, moved in her chair and looked at the King with bright and steady eyes. In times of trouble she was apt to take on her own father's [illegible] and [illegible] nature.

[illegible]

[illegible] said the King, "that it is necessary [illegible] matter of state. Personally I [illegible] that I should be pleased to note."

"You [illegible]," said Diana, and [illegible] the pallid Ludwig shifting from one foot to the other and [illegible] his hands together as he [illegible].

"That [illegible], however," her father continued, "I fear must be disregarded. I hold myself greatly to blame for not putting a stop to your flirtation on the river with Mr. Strong.

"But even [illegible] I presume the girls [illegible] and I was inclined to see nothing [illegible] merely regarded you as Miss Jones. That you would so far forget yourself as to forget that you were not Miss Jones, but the Princess Diana, was a fault on your part for which I think you have already had sufficiently to pay.

"But the situation," the King went on, "has now become intolerable. When a man in Strong's position of life has the audacity to attempt to [illegible] me, [illegible] breaks into my house at a most unwelcome time, matters have reached a pass which obviously cannot be allowed to continue. It is indeed [illegible] to put a stop to these outrages on the part of Strong that I am [illegible] to take the present step.

"The formal papers connected with the matter can be drawn up when we reach Bomberg. In the meantime I desire you to formally acknowledge Prince Ludwig as your affianced husband."

Diana rose from her chair. She was as cool and as perfectly collected as her father.

"Please understand," she said quite quietly, "that I absolutely decline to be sacrificed either for reasons of state or for the furtherance of your private business. I am surprised that you should ask it of me. The thing is impossible."

She turned and looked at Ludwig, her eyes blazing. She extended her hand toward him with a little gesture of contempt. [illegible] his pallid face and his shifting feet [illegible].

"Yes," she said, "it is [illegible] enough [illegible] aloud and [illegible] laughter.

"[illegible] ridiculous to expect me to marry—that!"

The King rose [illegible]. His eyes were as steel. He did not care about the task of making war on his daughter, but the spirit of domination which possessed him [illegible] his heart [illegible].

"Permit me to say, madam," he said, "that an exhibition of this sort on your part is unworthy of my daughter. Before you leave this room I will place your hand in Ludwig's and bind you to him as far as the word of honor can bind."

(To Be Continued Next Sunday.)

"But it is absurd, ridiculous, to expect me to marry—that!"

THE ADVANCE MODELS FOR LINEN FROCKS,

by MRS. CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER.

The Ever-Useful Jumper Dress of Linen Here in New Models.

The Vogue of Cretonne Increases.

LINEN combined with silk, satin, velvet, lace or beautiful hand embroidery—we see it everywhere this Summer.

And for once fashion goes hand in hand with common sense, for what could be more appropriate for wear in our Summer temperature than linens? There's nothing cooler looking than crisp, snowy linen when the mercury begins to climb ambitiously upward, and for cooler days the linens which are here this year in all kinds of fascinating and unusual colorings are just the thing.

Those who visited the shops when the Summer fabrics were first on view could not fail to be impressed by the variety and novelty of this year's linens. In the first place the art of dyeing linens seemed to have taken several forward strides, such soft and beautiful colors were everywhere to be seen. Queer, soft, faded-looking blues, and bluey violets and all the raspberry and coral shades were there to delight an artist's eye, besides a host of more usual colors. For smart tailored suits there were the inevitable two-toned stripes, as well as the more exclusive hair line checks. There were linens which so well imitated rajah silk that it needed the sense of touch to distinguish between the two. French linens were more than usually soft and velvety looking.

If these things are a satisfaction to behold in the piece, how much more admirable are they when we see them skilfully combined with contrasting fabrics and made up into dresses or suits—or that nondescript, but nevertheless most useful, jumper frock.

The jumper dress of linen is to the fore again this year, and it has much to be said in its favor. No wonder the majority of women refuse to discard it, although it has already been worn for a longer time than fashion usually permits. As if to make jumper dresses more irresistible, the designers have taken particular pains with this year's models, and the result is most satisfactory. Worn over delicate guimpes of lawn and embroidery or lace, these dresses are charming and cool, and adaptable into the bargain.

The particular point in which this year's linen gowns and suits differ from other years is in their trimming. But we have become so accustomed to seeing all kinds of fabrics combined that linen trimmed elaborately with satin or expensive lace does not seem at all incongruous. From French designers we have learned the trick of using touches of black on colored gowns to give chic or bring out some particular point, and this season a costume without its brilliant black note is seldom seen. It may be only a minute neck bow of black velvet or satin, but it is there.

Black velvet is being used very effectively on colored linens. Coats cut on the strictly tailored lines, which never really go out, let butterfly sleeves and queer, floppy French coats come and go as they may, have cuffs, collars, pocket flaps and buttons of black velvet, and skirts, too, are often trimmed with velvet covered buttons to match.

Of course you've noticed what an important part buttons are playing in the way of trimming. From being a merely useful part of dress they have been raised to the position of being most ornamental. Especially on linens are they found in all their glory. Buttons covered with linen and embroidered by hand in silk which tones or contrasts with the dress are almost a necessity to a well-regulated linen frock. They run in lines down the front of the skirt, they transfix trimmings, but more often are used solely and quite frankly for effect with no thought of use.

Cretonne covered buttons lend a quaint air to dresses of linen and are a most up-to-date trimming, for at last American women seem to have accepted this upholstery fabric as a possible dress trimming.

Now we see parasols of cretonne in lovely designs and charming colorings, cretonne coats, hats swathed in cretonne, shopping bags made of cretonne, collars and cuffs of cretonne, belts and, as I have said, buttons—all of this effective material. Even delicate evening gowns of net and lace bear applied roses and other exaggerated large flowers cut from the material which we formerly associated only with cottage furniture! But this is only what French women have been doing for several seasons. The women on this side of the water have been a trifle slow in making up their minds, that is all.

Filet is a favorite lace for use in combination with linen and, as ornamentation is [illegible] in frequent [illegible] designs [illegible] worked [illegible] silks or worsteds. [illegible] varied by the design of [illegible] lined by the thin [illegible] lon work threaded th[illegible]. All these little [illegible] ence between the [illegible] the ordinary [illegible] where the [illegible] for she can [illegible] sewing [illegible] afterward [illegible] to the dressmaker to add a touch of [illegible] to her gown.

Coats of lace dyed to match skirts of linen are very smart and make a [illegible] costume for almost any formal day wear. Sometimes the coats have strappings or buttons of linen, but the skirts have never a touch of lace. And, by the way, short plaited skirts seem to be on the point of retreating in favor of gored skirts, which are somewhat scant as to hem and built on very straight lines all the way up.

Russet brown and a dull peacock blue are two colors which many smart women have chosen for their linen gowns. Pure white is not as popular as it has been, although it will always be worn to a certain extent, particularly in the country. Unbleached linens made by the peasants of Italy on hand looms, and combined with some of the beautiful heavy Italian laces, make ideal dresses, but only for women to whom dressmakers' bills are not a matter of much moment.

The central figure of the page shows a very good type of jumper dress. The straight, unbroken line from yoke to hem and the waist and sleeves cut in one are features of this season's models. The trimming around the yoke is of heavily embroidered linen bands, which is repeated on the sleeves. A narrow cording joins the waist and skirt at the sides and back and some cleverly cut darts reduce the fullness at the waist line. Buttons formed of cordings of the linen coiled around and around trim the waist and skirt.

Of very different effect is the figure shown in the sketch lettered "B." A plaited skirt of linen is worn with a draped waist of embroidered linen batiste of exactly the same shade. This would be an excellent design for a slight figure, for it is very soft and graceful. Linen bands trim the front and swathe the waist. One of the woven cord chains which complete many of the better linen gowns is criss-crossed down the front, tying and hanging in long ends. The fulness of the sleeves is particularly well graduated and does not look at all clumsy, as sleeves made in this way are sometimes apt to do.

Braiding done in fine silk soutache which last year characterized many of the more exclusive models has this season found its way to the linen gowns sold in department stores and thus has lost much of its desirability. However, little or big buttons made of soutache braid put on with cord simulating a buttonhole is a trimming much liked, again the craze for buttons, you see.

This year is indeed a year for the girl with a limited dress allowance, for short lengths of materials picked up on bargain counters can be combined with other materials with wonderful success. The jumper dress is a boon to a woman who cannot have a large stock of dresses, a few waists, as it were, [illegible] way of yoke and sleeves.

Then materials [illegible] fortunately in high favor, cotton voiles of charming coloring and texture may be had for a song, linens are much reduced in cost, and dimities and silk muslins are marked astonishingly low. With a little taste and care and a modest [illegible] of cash there is no excuse for the old familiar cry of "Nothing to wear."

To Bind Closer the Ties of Germany and America.

bearded men going through gymnastic exercises in their turnhalls, of which there is at least one in every German city or town.

The origin of the Turn Verein is interesting. Friederich Ludwig Jahn is generally regarded as the first suggestor of constant and systematic physical culture. He is called the "Turnfather." He was born in 1778, was a student at several German universities and became a teacher in Berlin. He felt deeply the humiliation of his Fatherland at the hands of Napoleon, and conceived the idea of regenerating the whole German people by physical exercise. He started an open-air gymnasium, at the Hasenheide (Rabbit-Field) in Berlin, and became a hero. In 1813 he joined the famous Luetzow corps, and helped to liberate the Fatherland from French oppression. The German Kings and Princes, after regaining their positions with the aid of Jahn and thousands of men like him, soon forgot the promises they had made to the people.

Jahn was denounced as a demagogue, and spent several years in prison. He died in 1852 in Frieburg, but the idea he furnished grew tremendously. The Deutsche Turnerschaft, the German Gymnastic Union, the organization which Jahn had practically merely suggested, became a definite, permanent German institution. It has now about a million members. The organization has spread to other countries, and wherever Germans are to be found in any part of the world, there Turn Vereins are to be found. The idea of the organization was brought to the United States by the German revolutionists, who had to flee for their lives when the reaction triumphed in 1848, and such men as Carl Schurz and Franz Sigel became American citizens. Started as a means of national defence by Jahn, the German Turn Verein is to-day a hygienic organization which has for its motto, "A healthy body makes a healthy mind."

The German has ever played a prominent part in the history of the United States. He had some notable representatives during the Revolutionary War, when Steuben, De Kalb and Muhlenberg fought for freedom from British oppression for the American colonies. And, similarly, no more patriotic Americans were to be found in the Civil War than the German-American Turners. Turners of to-day tell with pride how most of the gymnasiums had to be closed during the war, as nearly all the native Turners had enlisted in the army. The New York Turners sent a whole regiment, the Twentieth, the Turner Rifles, while the Turners of other cities sent companies and battalions.

Mr. Hearst's donation emphasizes not only the importance of the Frankfort Turnfest, and his desire to increase the friendly relations between Germany and the United States, but calls attention to the patriotic impulse that led to the establishment of the Turnerbund, to the patriotism of the German American and the important and wholesome part that he has always played in this country in its development on the soundest lines.

The German Turnfest in the old Fatherland is held every five years. It is the greatest popular known event in Germany. Usually several hundred thousand persons visit the city in which the festival is held. The last festival was held in old Nuernberg, and then, as now and always, Germans from the United States participated.

This year every American city of importance will be represented at Frankfort. Individuals, teams and classes are scheduled from New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Buffalo, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, St. Louis, San Francisco and many other places.

The correspondence shows how the Hearst trophy came to be given. Mr. Adolf Timm, secretary of the Pennsylvania Branch of the National German American Alliance, evidently having in mind the trip to the Germanic Museum at Harvard, taken by the delegates of the German American Alliance Convention last Fall, as guests of Mr. Hearst, wrote the following letter:

Hon. William Randolph Hearst, New York City:

Dear Sir: Knowing that you take great interest in German American affairs, I beg to draw your attention to the coming athletic contest at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, in which many German-American teams will participate. I think a prize for the society whose team gets the largest number of points would not only increase the number of teams, but also encourage them to do their best. Yours respectfully,

ADOLF TIMM.

About the same time, Professor Ernst Richard, of Columbia College, and an official of the New York Turnerbund, wrote to Mr. Hearst, as follows:

My Dear Mr. Hearst:

In view of the great interest you take in the friendly relations between the United States and Germany, let me call your attention to the great "Turnfest," the national festival of German gymnastic unions, which is held every fourth year, and will be celebrated this year in Frankfort-on-the-Main July 18-23.

These festivals have great historic significance, since they were most effective nurseries of the national spirit before the foundation of the German Empire, and even now they offer an opportunity to unite all Germans, the representatives of the millions in Austria, in Switzerland, as well as in America, with more of the political empire, which at the most comprises only two-thirds of them.

It has been asked of me as the second speaker of the New York District of the North American Gymnastic Union that I should address you in support of a suggestion that you, who are publishing one of the most widely circulated German newspapers, might donate a trophy for the American society which, by the fact that one of its members receives the highest award of the American contestants in Frankfort, proves the efficiency of the training it gives.

I am heartily and sincerely in sympathy with this suggestion, and am sure that both here and abroad such a token of American amity for the Germans as your generous gift would represent would be greatly appreciated, not only by the societies interested, but by all unprejudiced people both here and in the Fatherland.

While I write, the idea occurs to me that it would be nice if the victor could receive this prize (in case the suggestion meets with your favor) from the hands of the most beautiful American girl among the ladies the Morgen Journal is sending to Europe this Summer.

I have been glad to comply with the request of my friends to write this letter, because I welcome every opportunity to strengthen and give expression to the mutual appreciation of both nations, and I hope you will look at it from the same point of view.

Yours very truly,

ERNST RICHARD.

Mr. Hearst accepted the suggestion of Mr. Timm and Professor Richard on May 17, in the following letter:

My Dear Doctor—I have received with much pleasure and read with much interest your kind letter of recent date concerning the Turnfest to be held in Frankfort-on-the-Main from July 18 to July 23. I quite appreciate the importance of the occasion and have planned to go over to Germany to witness the series of events that take place there this Summer.

You and other gentlemen who make a similar suggestion compliment me greatly in asking me to donate a trophy for the Frankfort celebration, and I shall be glad to do this to express, as best I may, the respect and admiration that I entertain for the Germans both as citizens of the Fatherland and as our fellow citizens in the United States.

I certainly do take great interest in maintaining and promoting the friendly relations existing between the United States and Germany, and I sincerely hope that there will never be between these two great nations any kind of contest except such friendly ones as the National Festival of the German Gymnastic Unions contemplates.

Yours very truly,

Signed W. R. HEARST.

Several days later there was a conference at which were present Mr. Hearst, Dr. Gustav Scholer, president of the New York Turn Verein, Mr. M. F. Propping, president of the Brooklyn, E. D., Turn Verein, and Gustav Schweppendieck, president New York District, North American Gymnastic Union. Messrs. Scholer, Propping and Schweppendieck were informed of the character of prize that had been decided upon by Mr. Hearst. They said that the competition for it should be open to all the German Americans participating at the Frankfort Turnfest. They said that a gift of this character should be given to the Verein whose member made at the Frankfort Festival the highest record. They thanked Mr. Hearst warmly for his evidence of interest, and said that the prize would probably result in greatly increasing the American participation in the festival.

The Brooklyn, E. D., Turn Verein adopted resolutions, expressing appreciation of the trophy, and M. Maurice F. Propping sent the following letter:

Hon. W. R. Hearst, New York City:

Dear Sir—Referring to our conference to-day between Dr. G. Scholer, president of the New York Turn Verein, Mr. Iltgen, Mr. G. Schweppendieck, president of the New York district of the Gymnastic Union, and myself, as president of the Turn Verein of Brooklyn, E. D., I wish to add that on inspection of your magnificent gift, which you intend to present to the Turn Verein in the United States whose member will make the best score of the American turners at the great German turnfest in Frankfort in July next, I wish to express the astonishment of my colleagues at the splendid token which you will offer as an encouragement to physical culture and which is, in fact, now becoming an important factor in our educational system.

We accept this gift as trustees for the purposes expressed and shall make known to the Turners of the United States participating in this turnfest the purpose of this magnificent donation.

The official figures of the German judges as to proficiency shall, of course, be taken as a basis to determine the American winner.

I trust that you may be present at the gymnastic exhibition of the E. D. Turn Verein at the Broadway [illegible], Brooklyn, June 1.

Again accept our thanks [illegible] the young American Turners.

Yours very respectfully,

MAURICE F. PROPPING,

President of the Brooklyn T. V. E. D.

Mr. Timm was equally well pleased and sent a letter as follows:

Philadelphia, May 20, 1908.

Hon. William Randolph Hearst,
New York City.

Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to read in to-day's "Morgen Journal" that you offer a trophy for the society whose team will do the best work at the athletic contest in Frankfort-on-the-Main. I am sure your noble gift will have the appreciation of every friend of physical education. May it lead, too, the German American athletes to victory. Yours respectfully,

ADOLF TIMM.

Subsequently Messrs. Scholer and Propping prepared a circular letter to be sent to all the Turn Vereins throughout the United States. The circular is as follows:

New York, May 21, 1908.

Dear Turners—A very valuable and artistic gift has been offered to the undersigned by the Hon. William Randolph Hearst, to be given as a prize to the German American Turn Verein whose member will achieve the highest record among the American competitors at the Turnfest at Frankfort.

The donor of this gift desires to encourage the Turn Verein, and to help foster the good relations existing between our old Fatherland and the United States, by stimulating interest in the Turnfest in Germany.

The undersigned have accepted the gift with thanks and do hereby call the attention of your society to this magnificent offer of Mr. Hearst. The official figures of the German judges will decide as to whom the prize is to be awarded.

The gift consists of a large cup, seventeen inches high, and with a capacity of sixty pints; twelve goblets and a large tray; the whole weighing four hundred and fifty ounces. All parts are of hammered, sterling silver. The decorations consist of grape vines and grapes. This gift is a real work of art, and has an unusual intrinsic value. With fraternal greetings,

DR. GUSTAV SCHOLER, President New York Turn Verein.

GUSTAV SCHWEPPENDIECK, President New York District, North American Gymnastic Union.

"I CERTAINLY do take great interest in maintaining and promoting the friendly relations existing between the United States and Germany and I sincerely hope that there will never be between these two great nations any kind of contest except such friendly ones as the National Festival of the German Gymnastic Union contemplates

So wrote William Randolph Hearst when urged by various gentlemen to donate a prize to be competed for by German-American participants in the Frankfort Turnfest, to be held in that attractive city on the Main next July

The advancement of physical culture has long been a prime idea of Mr Hearst, evidenced by his donation of numerous trophies several years ago for the athletic contests arranged among the public school children of New York But in this instance much more important than the development of man's physical being is Mr Hearst's idea to still further promote the ever-increasing friendship between the United States and Germany a greater appreciation by each nation of the good qualities of the other To emphasize the importance of this cause, Mr Hearst took pleasure in complying with the request of those who asked him to give a prize There is to-day at Gorham's in Fifth avenue, a magnificent specimen of the silversmith's art in the shape of a mammoth loving cup with its accompaniment of twelve goblets and a salver They are made of hammered sterling silver The decoration is old German, of vines and grapes. An idea of the effect of these art objects may be gained from the facts that the cup is seventeen inches high that the salver is twenty-nine inches long that the combined weight of all the pieces is four hundred and fifty ounces, and that the cup has a capacity of sixty pints

In a few days the silver will be sent to Frankfort where it will be on exhibition until the games occur from July 18 to July 23, when it will be presented to the American Verein whose member has made at the festival the highest score

This Turnfest promises to be, indeed a remarkable affair About 200,000 members of the organization and guests from all over the world are expected at Frankfort A tremendous hall has been built especially for the purposes of this great tournament. A campus has been laid out where calisthenic drills will be performed by the different branch organizations. Visitors to the Turnfest will see the impressive spectacle of 30,000 young men clad in their handsome uniforms, going through the complicated and beautiful drills to the musical time set by an enormous brass band

The German Turners of America will also give an exhibition drill, dumbbell exercises, about 500 strong It is the first time in the history of gymnastics that so large a body of Turners crosses the wide ocean in order to participate in the friendly contests

It is the object of the German system of gymnastics to develop the body systematically and all parts equally It does not encourage the development of champions in certain lines, whose only aim seems to be to break records, and who injure their health in doing so. The champions of the German Turnerschaft must show good results all around. They must be proficient in work on the horizontal and parallel bars and the horse, and also in the field sports, such as running, jumping, climbing and putting the shot. Those who get the highest averages in all these branches are proclaimed the winners and receive a wreath of oak leaves and a diploma

The German Turners are not only active in their gymnasiums in their youth. They stick to it through their lives. It is a common spectacle to see many gray-

BY A. H. C. MITCHELL.

A man named Rigler, wearing a blue suit of clothes, played a wonderful game of baseball at the South End grounds yesterday afternoon. To be sure, eighteen or twenty athletes representing the Boston and St. Louis National League baseball teams went through the motions of pitching, catching and batting, but comparatively speaking, they cut very little figure in the final result, although the official score makes St. Louis a victor 9 to 3.

In Rigler's style of play balls were called strikes and strikes were called balls. Ordinary grounders were transformed into base hits and base hits into errors. The growling at Rigler's eyesight was continuous and at one stage of the game McGann protested so strenuously that he was banished from the field. This necessitated a shift in the Boston line up and Kelley went to first while Johnny Bates filled in at left field.

Cardinals Put Game on Ice.

Leaving Rigler out of it entirely, however, it can be said that the Cardinals got there in the first and second innings, and they scored enough runs before Goose Dorner was taken out of the box to win the game. Boultes relieved Goose in the middle of the second, but he couldn't put a stopper on the Cardinal bats, so at the end of the inning Kelley told him to don his street clothes and enjoy the rest of the game from the grand stand.

Hi Young then stepped to the rubber. Hi was the only bright button on the coat of defeat. Hi is a tall, rangy chap, who seems to possess a bit of humor, considerable grit, a fair assortment of curves and a wallop. In the six innings he twirled he let the visitors down with five singles. Two of these were bunts, and another was a grounder that bounced too high for Hannifan. It can be said that only two real safeties were made off the youngster's curves.

Hi Shows His Gameness.

Hi pounded a two-bagger to the left field seats, and in the ninth, when he was knocked out in collision with Rigler, he showed his gameness by resuming play as soon as his wits returned. Both he and Rigler were running toward third on a play when they came together. The umpire's pate jolted Hi's chin with full force and both dropped to the ground. The crowd were jeering at the misfortunes of the indicator man when they noticed Young laid out, and the hoots and derisy ceased. When Hi resumed play he got a great hand from the fans.

The Doves lost because they didn't keep on running when they reached first. There were twelve red legs left on bases. This is foolish when the Cardinals are the opponents. All one has to do is to keep on running and the St. Louis players will throw the ball over the lot. There is no good reason why all twelve men left on bases should not have tallied, and that would have made the score 15 to 8. To be sure, the Cardinals had the Doves 8 to 0 at the end of the second, but what are eight runs when you are playing against the St. Louis Nationals?

Doves Play Dopy Ball.

The Doves played a dopy game of ball, anyway. If they had attended to business instead of trying to bait the umpire the game might have at least been closer. As it was the eight tallies took the ginger out of the game before the fans had become comfortably settled in the seats and thereafter there was nothing to do but yell at the umpire.

A two-bagger by Shaw, Charles's sacrifice, a pass to Murray, Delehanty's three-bagger and Konetchy's single gave St. Louis three runs in the first. With one out in the second, two passes, singles by Shaw and Charles and a home run by Murray over the left field fence scored five more runs, Boultes going to the box after Shaw had singled.

In the fifth Delehanty's single, Konetchy's sacrifice and Byrnes's safety tallied another.

Two for the Bostons.

In the second a pass to Kelley and two errors gave the Doves one run and in the sixth they failed to score, although three singles were made. In the seventh, with one down, Beaumont doubled and Browne and Bates singled. An infield error and a wild pitch gave the Doves two runs. Score:

SH! 'TIS SAID YALE NINE HAS GONE STALE

Blue Players Won't Practice Before Harvard Game at New Haven Tuesday.

New Haven, June 20.—Wearied by trying to play three championship games in four days, the Yale nine has gone stale. Practice between the first game at Harvard Thursday and the second here next Tuesday has been practically omitted by advice of Dr. Al Sharpe. On Monday the team will go to the Country Club for the day and Tuesday the same trip will be made, the players spending Monday night at the Infirmary. [illegible] will be seen Tuesday at the Country Club and from there the team will go to the gymnasium to dress.

The Harvard nine arrived here at six o'clock this afternoon and went to the Hotel Shoreham at Morris Cove, which they have chartered for their stay. They will practice on Yale Field Monday.

PINCH HITTER MADE A HOMER

The crack Hecla A. C. of the West End added another victory to their long list of wins, by defeating the strong Clarendons at Squire's field, Arlington, yesterday afternoon, by the score of 11 to 6. The Heclas won by bunching their hits in the first and last innings. Both twirlers pitched ground ball, having several strikeouts to their credit. The other features were contributed by Meehan, for the Clarendons, who made a fine catch in deep left, and Griffin, of the Heclas, who was put into bat in the ninth inning as a pinch hitter, and drove out a homer. George Washington Wins Intercollegiate Shoot

College Cracks Make Great Hit in Their First Annual Attempt at Marksmanship.

George Washington University triumphed at the American Intercollegiate rifle shoot at Wakefield yesterday, winning the trophy by a score of 725 out of a possible 900. University of Pennsylvania finished second with 687, Harvard third, with 640, and Technology fourth, with 577. Yale and Amherst lost by default. The highest individual score was made by R. Fehr, Washington, with 124.

The shoot was the first of a series to be held annually under the auspices of the National Rifle Association. Each man on the winning team receives a medal from the association, and the team got a large silver shield to hold as long as it defended the championship.

Officials of the War Department and National Guard express great interest in the movement for developing markmanship in colleges. Colonel J. Caswell, M. V. M., considered the work of the college teams remarkable. The teams follow:

George Washington—Captain J. W. Pattison, Z. C. Thirpen, C. H. Bowker, J. R. Fehr, R. W. Howell, F. C. Dolbey.

GILCHRIST CO. NINE LOST FIRST GAME

Houghton & Dutton Co. Players Took Exciting Contest, 6 to 5.

The Gilchrist Co. went down to defeat yesterday before the hands of Houghton & Dutton Co., in the opening game of the Dry Goods League on the Boston College grounds by the score of 6 to 5.

Each nine had a large following, including a host of pretty girls who were always ready to give a lusty cheer whenever any of their favorites made a good play.

Much credit is due to Ashman for Houghton & Dutton's victory, as he not only pitched a fine game but he made the winning run in the tenth inning, which dissolved the tie and made his team the winner.

Houghton & Dutton scored in the first two innings, which was soon overcome by [illegible] when they scored five in the third. After this Gilchrist failed to score, but Houghton & Dutton slowly but surely regained lost ground, and when the eighth inning ended it was found that the score was tie.

Ryan, who was in the box for Gilchrist, pitched a good game, and if he received the proper backing the score might have been different. He fanned fourteen batters.

In the tenth Ashman was safe on Gleason's error. He then stole second and went to third on McLeod's wild throw to catch him stealing. He scored when Everett hit to Holey.

O'Connel played a good game at short for Houghton, Brophy and Duan also batted well. Holey, Tracy and O'Neil played a good game for Gilchrist. Score:

JOCKEY CLUB WILL TEST BETTING LAW

Obtain Habeas Corpus Writ for Arrested Bookmaker; Arguments Made Tomorrow.

New York, June 20.—Two moves were made by the track people to-day to test the legality of arrests for making verbal wagers on horse races. Early in the day the Coney Island Jockey Club secured a writ of habeas corpus from Supreme Justice Bischoff on behalf of Melville Collins, who accepted and won a bet from a police captain on a race on Friday's card. Collins was ordered produced in court on a charge of accepting money on a wager. The entire matter, it is said, was pre-arranged for the purpose of making a test case. Arguments on the writ will be heard Monday.

Following the Collins matter, attorneys for the Jockey Club made separate applications to three Brooklyn Justices for warrants for any persons making bets on the grounds of the club where no money was passed and no record made of the transaction. All three of the magistrates refused the warrants on the ground that an oral wager is not an illegal transaction. The District Attorney's office agreed with the magistrates.

SIX NEW RECORDS MADE IN NEW ENGLAND A. A. U. MEET

Also, as Many as Four Old Marks Tied in Track Championships on Tech Field.

BY DYKE CLARK

R[illegible] were [illegible] championships of the New England A. A. U. yesterday afternoon at Tech field.

The fields were not large in the [illegible] events but the quality was [illegible] the pick of the atheletes of New England were on hand to compete for the titles and as a result the winners had to go some to [illegible] their trophies.

The appearance of several Olympic candidates in the fields helped to [illegible] interest to the competition and in several [illegible] surprises were in store [illegible] upsets [illegible].

Of the Olympic team Coe and Welton won their events in fine style and proved to be in top shape.

No less [illegible] records were [illegible] during the afternoon of sport, which shows the high calibre of the men in athletics. As many as four old marks were [illegible] and all in all the events got a [illegible] going up. The 440 [illegible] shot put, hammer throw and [illegible] were the events distanced.

Extreme Heat for Athletes.

It was piping hot for athletic endeavor, [illegible] the athletes went through under the [illegible] remarkably well and in some cases [illegible] won several prizes, going in one [illegible] after the other.

Sherman, the Dartmouth crack sprinter [illegible] three medals by winning the 100, 220 [illegible] second in the broad jump.

Alderman Ellery Clark, protecting his [illegible] hair with a white canvas cap, was [illegible] in all the weight events, and the old [illegible] of the path made good by taking three [illegible] to add to his [illegible] trophies, counting for places in the shot [illegible] hammer throw and fifty-six pound weight.

Mayhew of Brown, one of the greatest all round athletic collegians of the modern age, took two firsts in the broad jump and low hurdles, while Lynch, the husky South Boston A. A. [illegible] took a first and second in throwing [illegible].

It was a regular B. A. [illegible] day for the Boston Athletic Association [illegible] the Exeter st. club counted in nearly [illegible] event [illegible] piled up the greatest [illegible] of points. The South Boston A. A. was the second prominent club figuring for places.

There were only four entries in the hundred and the absence of Nelson, the scholastic flyer, and Lockwood of Harvard robbed the event of much keenness. It was a duel between Sherman the N. E. intercollegiate champ., and Eaton of the B. A. A. Sherman won by a couple of feet but Eaton was gaining ground on his conqueror in the last few strides. The time of ten seconds flat equalled the best.

Sherman Took Dashes.

The 220-yard dash was a repetition of the hundred and Sherman again proved the victor in fast time.

The surprise came in the quarter, in which Prout, the B. A. A. sprinter, was expected to win, but Robbins of the Cambridge Y. M. C. A. got a beautiful start and, going out as if he was running the hundred, opened up a gap at the eighth pole. Blackburn of Tech was fouled on the first turn, which hurt his chances, and Prout was caught in a pocket. Robbins never let up in his terrific gait, but Prout was coming up on him in the home stretch and closed much of the ground lost. The time of 50 1-5 seconds shades the old record slightly.

Frank Sheehan, the South Boston fast stepper, had the half-mile run all to himself, as there were only two opposed to him, and he ran in 1.59.

The mile was one of the warmest affairs on the card, and was another surprise, as Ballard, a school boy from Providence, beat out some old timers. Sullivan of the B. A. A. and McVickers of the South Boston A. A. had a hard fight lap after lap alternating in the lead with Ballard trailing them.

On the last lap Ballard, who who had let the pair kill themselves, came out and showed his speed. He passed both in the back stretch and came to the tape five yards in the lead with Sullivan the same distance in front of McVickers. Ballard is the Yale and Harvard interscholastic champion, and he ran in 4:31 2-5, which is a new mark.

A race was looked for between Lee of the B. A. A. and Welton of the Lawrence Y. M. C. A. in the five-mile run, but Lee was forced to drop out at four miles, overcome by the heat. Welton kept up a steady [illegible] for the whole distance, and put on a fine sprint at the finish. He was nearly a lap ahead of Lyons of South Boston A. A. Halstead, the third runner. Welton and Lyons were the only ones left who finished out of the six entries who started, which included Tommie Ford, the one-time winner of the Marathon race.

Rand Lost to Mayhew.

Rand, the Harvard and B. A. A. hurdler, won over the high sticks, but lost over the low ones in the closest kind of a finish with Mayhew of Brown.

Gidney did some clever bumping in the high event and stopped at five feet eleven and one-half inches.

All three places in the broad jump were over twenty-two feet. Mayhew beat Sherman and Farrell of the South Boston A. A. by an inch and a half. Sherman beat his opponent in the jump off.

Coe made a new record in the shot put, throwing the lead ball forty-six feet and one-quarter of an inch. Schoenfuss, the old Harvard thrower, was second and Ellery Clark third.

Sherman, the unattached athlete, won the hammer throw easily but failed in throwing the fifty-six pound weight and was unplaced.

Lawrence, the B. A. A. pole vaulter, did over eleven feet in his specialty and got a new record. The summaries:

FULLER CAPTURES STATE GOLF TITLE

Wilder, of Vesper Club, Beaten 3 Up, in 16 Holes.

C. S. Fuller of the Commonwealth G. C. won the Massachusetts State golf championship at Wollaston yesterday, beating H. H. Wilder, Vesper Club, in the final match, three up in sixteen holes.

It was a hard fought match, with Fuller always in front, as he led practically from the start and was especially effective in the long, gruelling game of thirty-six holes, eighteen being played in the morning and the same number in the afternoon.

On the eighth hole both made sensational drives, Fuller hitting the flag and dropping a few inches from it. Both halved the hole in two.

Wilder on the fourteenth made a put of thirty feet, which was a beauty considering the lie of the ball, but Fuller had a better approach and won the hole. The results:

First 18 holes:

READVILLE MATINEES OPEN WITH EXCELLENT RACING

Arnold Lawson Won Best Race of Card With Ruritania in Three Hard Heats.

BY ED. COGSWELL.

Out at Readville [illegible] the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Boston formally opened their matinee season with four races, an exhibition against time and a concert by [illegible] following, many of whom were accompanied by ladies: President A. S. Bigelow, John Shepard, Henry C. Jackson, George F. Leonard, Chauncey Sears, Benjamin Pope, T. L. Quimby, A. C. Haley, chairman of the race committee; Frank Hall, Arnold Lawson, [illegible] Everett L. Smith, Justin Edwards, Harry Buswell, George A. Graves, Charles M. Jewett, C. H. Belcher [illegible] C. H. Traiser.

Best Race of Card.

Class B [illegible] of the [illegible] Sanders [illegible] with [illegible] Arnold Lawson [illegible] down on his [illegible] the stirrups of his [illegible] up a notch on the reins, and was then prepared to give all a horse race from the word with Ruritania. [illegible] others [illegible] with Mr. Lawson cut loose with his mare. Gradually he decreased [illegible] he [illegible] a sight [illegible] to see the [illegible] few feet Ruritania [illegible] speed to catch [illegible] of 2.20 [illegible] first half was [illegible] 1.07½.

The next [illegible] for Mr. Lawson, his mare [illegible] by a good length, though [illegible] only a second slower. Mr. [illegible] ascribed the defeat of Lexington [illegible] the races in front of the clubhouse [illegible] of the wire, further down the track, as after having passed the regular finishing place his gelding clearly demonstrated that he believed the race was over and would not try to race the [illegible] distance up to the clubhouse.

Another Split-Heat Battle

Another split-heat race was Class C, in which Va Za Ka lost the second heat to King Clay. However, L. R. Peck did not give up hopes, and the final heat finding the grey gelding in trouble at the half he had no bother in securing the blue ribbon. The brush of speed that Va Za Ka displayed in this heat down the back stretch when she marched past the leaders going from the quarter to the half, was remarkable, she trotting so fast that it seemed [illegible] the others had stopped to a jog.

Frank Hall finished second in each of the three heats with Baroness Hugenot, and was much pleased with her. He will [illegible] the club get a [illegible] before the matinee [illegible] In fact, she was [illegible] programme yes[illegible] the first heat [illegible] three heats were right [illegible]

[illegible] had only to buggy ride to [illegible] Payne Jennings, a [illegible] Readville matinees, while the same event [illegible] saw Davonia, Blackwood and Betty Bush turn for the first time in the "fun" sport.

Avener Off the Reel.

Charles Sanders took into camp his opponents handily with Avener in straight heats. Arthur Parker started the three-year-old [illegible] Hazelwood and she was next to the victor in each trip.

Mack Mack, 2.08, the champion trotter of [illegible] was started to beat 2.18, and his owner, George A. Graves, simply jogged the gelding to make the time 2.16¾. He let him have his head a little in the third quarter, which was in 32½.

Twenty-two Entered in Races.

The race committee report twenty-two entries in the races for next Wednesday, the field day of the Knight Templars at the track in celebration of St. John Day. [illegible] prizes are elegant silver cups.

Word has been received from Andrew [illegible] of New York that he is willing to ship his trotter, Invader, 2:10, champion of the New York Speedway, to take [illegible] a matinee at Readville against Mack Mack and Chase, 2.07¼, champion [illegible] Charles River Speedway, at any [illegible] the race committee of the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Boston may elect. CORINTHIAN Y. C. ANNUAL OCEAN RACE

Marblehead, June 20.—The Corinthian Yacht Club started on their annual ocean race to Isles of Shoals and return this evening off the club house. The tug Orian of Boston was used by the regatta committee as judges' boat. William F. Carleton, chairman of the regatta committee, had charge. The weather conditions were all that could be desired, a fresh westerly breeze blowing, giving them a reach to Isles of Shoals.

At 7.15 the preparatory signal was given and at 7.25 Class C was sent away. In this class were the Essex, Gringo, Florinda, Annawana II., Sanderling, Tabasco III., Cornet and Juanona. Five minutes later Class B was sent away. They crossed in the following order: Sloop Mollie, Marie, Yawl Isan, sloops Shearwater II., Chewink IV. and Pontiac.

Most of the yachts hoisted balloon jib topsails on crossing the line and they were off on their thirty-three-mile run to the Whistler off White Island. At 7.35 Class A was given the whistle and but two boats started, the Dorello, which made a fine start, being on the line at the whistle, with the Mildred III., which had a slight handicap by parting her throat halyards just before the gun.

Most of the yachts took the inside course, going inside of Bakers Island. If the present wind holds they should be back by 10.30 Sunday morning.

GOOD BREEZES FOR WOLLASTON Y. C.

Many Boats Compete in Big Regatta in Quincy Bay.

With a heavy southwest wind blowing, which forced many of the smaller boats to withdraw, the Wollaston Yacht Club raced seven classes in Quincy Bay yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Interclub Yacht Racing Association of Massachusetts. A delay of fifteen minutes was occasioned to allow a number of the smaller boats to come to the line that were seen in the offing, and at 3.25 the C class was started, and the others followed at intervals of five minutes.

The race was without incident with the exception of the Alpha, which had her peak halyards carried away by the high wind but finished the race for a percentage. The Almaquade protested the Kittiwake in class I for fouling. The summaries in the classes were as follows:

LORD'S WILD THROW COSTS RED SOX GAME AT CHICAGO

Chicago, June 20.—Lord threw away one of the greatest pitchers' battles ever seen on the American League diamond in Chicago and gave the White Sox the third game of the series with the Boston Red Sox by a score of 1 to 0.

Cy Young and Big Ed Walsh pitched a terrific duel. Young had the better of the pitching, holding the White Sox to four hits, giving one base on balls and fanning six. Walsh held the Red Sox to five hits, also gave one base on balls and struck out a half dozen.

Lord made a wild throw in the third inning that eventually spelled ruin. Purtell, the Sox recruit started the inning with a bunt fly near the third base foul line. Young just missed it and booted the sphere as it struck the ground. The ball rolled to the Sox bench and the grand old pitcher threw to catch the runner at second. His throw was wild and Purtell was safe. Sullivan struck out and there was a chance the error would result in no damage. Then Dougherty flied to Thoney and Manager Jones was up. He got a base on balls, the only one Young issued. Then came the wild throw. Atz hit a hard bounder at Lord. He made a great stop and fired the ball to Unglaub. The latter couldn't have reached it had he been on a ladder. The ball rolled to the grand stand and Purtell tore across the plate with the winning run the only one of the game.

Two errors netted it, and unfortunately they came when they could do the most damage. So fierce was the contest that in all, save three innings, were the Boston batsmen retired in one, two, or three order while Chicago batted more than the required number in only two.

Cy. Young was given a great ovation every time he came to bat. As the game wore on, the reception became more enthusiastic, and the last time up he was compelled to doff his hat.

The Red Sox play here tomorrow. This will be the last game of the series, and will be a desperate contest, for the Bostons are out to take at least one game. The score:

"HI" YOUNG MAKES A BIG HIT WITH FANS IN HIS 1ST GAME

He Stops the Cardinals After They Had Hammered Goose Dorner and Jake Boultes.

Notes of the Game.

Hi Young [illegible]

[illegible]

Manager McCloskey [illegible]

Those Cardinals certainly can throw the ball all over the lot.

The score card spelt it Brown instead of Browne, Hannlan instead of Hannifan and Delahanty instead of Delehanty. Otherwise the names are [illegible] correct.

When Byrne was caught off first in the fifth inning and Richie [illegible] the runner safe, it was too much for Big Dan McGann. What he said to the umpire would burn asbestos.

The Cardinals are here for another game on Monday.

REDS AND QUAKERS SPLIT

Philadelphia, June 20.—The Philadelphia Nationals broke even in a double header with Cincinnati here this afternoon before 14,602 people. It was the wind up of the series with the Western clubs and the last appearance of the Phillies before they go to Brooklyn and Boston. In the first contest Coakley and Sparks had a great battle resulting in the shutout of the locals 1 to 0 in just one hour and seven[illegible] minutes.

Just by way of finishing strong the home team turned the tables on the Reds in the second game with Corridon in the box. Spade was all to the Phillies' liking, and moreover the hits were timely. The Cincinnati twirler was very wild, especially in the seventh when by poor fielding and two bases on balls following a single he forced in a run. The score:

PREVENTS HOODS FROM RATTLING

New Invention Is Said to Fill a Long-Felt Want for Motorists.

"Necessity is the mother of invention." and the latest idea added to necessity's list is a simple little device now being placed on the market by the Hartford Rubber Works Company, known as the Hartford hood anti rattler.

The average automobile owner has noticed the rattling of the hood on his car and while it is but a little thing and does not reflect on the construction or durability of the machine, it is, nevertheless, annoying to the driver to constantly hear the rattling of the hood. To obviate this many owners have placed a strap across the centre of the hood, fastening it as tightly as possible to prevent shaking.

The Hartford hood anti-rattler goes a step further. It is a strip of flexible rubber about a foot in length, a couple of inches in width and about one-quarter inch thick, slotted at either end. When placed over the centre of the hood, the ends of the leather straps are drawn through the openings in the rubber strip at either end and then buckled down firmly on the side of the hood. This not only holds the hood in place positively, but on account of the elasticity of the rubber takes up whatever vibration there may be, and also deadens the noise.

This article is neatly lettered with the word "Hartford" and shows the winged wheel, the trade-mark of the company. It is made of a fine grade of rubber, fast black in color, that is, will not bloom with age, and we should judge would be a boon to automobile owners. Patents have been applied for.

AMHERST GETS BACK AT WILLIAMS NINE

Williamstown, June 20.—Amherst [illegible] back at Williams for her two defeats earlier this season, and beat the purple here to-day 10 to 3 before a crowd of Williams alumni. Williams was outplayed at every stage of the game, playing listless ball. The many errors on both sides were excusable because of a hard wind which blew dust cross the diamond in the players' faces. Jube of Amherst and Wadsworth of Williams [illegible] their batting eyes with them and were the stars of the game. Amherst scored in the [illegible] and was never headed. Williams led off with two [illegible] in the first inning, but failed to score. A three-base hit by Washburn of Amherst with two on in third inning practically decided the game. Brick was touched up just as hard as Templeton but Amherst managed to bunch her hits to more advantage. Score:

O'TOOLE HAS BAD FIRST INNING AT WORCESTER

New England League Champions Get Good Start and Beat Haverhill, 6 to 3.

Worcester, June 20.—Worcester defeated Haverhill, 6 to 3, this afternoon. In the first inning Mike O'Toole took an aerial flight and when his anchor clutched mother earth after a tempestuous sail in the ozone, the home team had five runs and the game was clinched. Four hits, including a timely two-bagger by Schwartz that tallied three runs, a sacrifice hit, a dead ball and a wild pitch added momentum to O'Toole's sailing.

DIAMOND TIRES DID THE TRICK

The capturing of four out of the six races at the Readville track last Wednesday by Diamond tires is but the furtherance of the success and victory of the product of the leading Akron house. Manager Cronin of the local branch of the Diamond Company is naturally much elated with this great victory, as it speaks volumes for the [illegible] and ability of its product. A tire to stand the hard work imposed in racing and specially where the races are ridden at an average of better than 58 seconds, must possess the best of material and workmanship, and [illegible] fact has been demonstrated in connection with Diamond tires.

One of the incidents of the recent race meet, and one which [illegible] the [illegible] of the Diamond [illegible] was that [illegible] with the Lorimer and the [illegible] Blue Bird. Just [illegible] in one of the events Lorimer determined to change one of his tires. The judges awarded [illegible] within which to make the change. The [illegible] tire was removed, a new case attached and Lorimer was [illegible] at the tape [illegible] seconds before the expiration of the three minutes of grace, the change having consumed but two minutes and twenty [illegible] seconds.

WANT HOTCHKISS IN BIG RACES

It is reported that the 120 horsepower Hotchkiss racer, owned by Harry Levey and driven so successfully at the recent Jamaica race [illegible] by J. Kilpatrick, will be seen in one of the big international road races this fall.

It is understood that considerable pressure has been brought to bear by the promoters of both the Vanderbilt and the Grand Prize races to secure the entry of the big yellow car. As yet no intimation has been given where the sympathies of Mr Levey lie in the matter of international races. At the Hotchkiss Import Company no statement in the matter is forthcoming.

This is the car which won the 20-mile free-for-all stripped chassis race at Readville in 20m. 28 1-5s., distancing its competitors. It also won the five-mile handicap. In the 20-mile event it varied not more than three seconds in any one mile for the entire distance, making the second, eighth and ninth miles in one minute flat. The slowest mile was covered in 1:03.

More than that, it made the fastest time created by a LEGITIMATE STOCK CAR in the Worcester Hill Climb. Time 1m. 23-5s.

A. A. A. TOUR WILL COME TO BOSTON GOOD ROADS MEETING AT BUFFALO Edited by J. C. KERRISON BRIARCLIFF RACE WILL AGAIN BE HELD

A. A. A. TOURISTS WILL BE HUB'S GUESTS FOR TWO DAYS

Route Is Changed and Visiting Autoists Will Be Well Cared for by Local Clubs.

BY J. C. KERRISON.

The A. A. A. tour will remain over in Boston on Saturday and Sunday, July 18 and 19. This determination has been announced by Chairman Frank Hower of the touring committee, who has supreme control of the test, and who has at last favorably considered the desires of the Bay State Automobile Association.

This will necessitate somewhat of a change in the program as originally mapped out, and will make the tour some days late in reaching Poland Springs. The change, however, is one that will be greatly appreciated by the tourists, especially considering the fact that they will tour direct from Albany to Boston on the day previous, covering something like 200 miles. Further than that there is a long hard drive ahead; that to Poland Springs, one which is by no means a pleasure outing, but will severely tax both the men and the machines.

The local automobile association has for months past made strong efforts to bring about a temporary halt of the tour upon its arrival in this town, but until yesterday its efforts seemed to be without avail. It is possible that the Springfield motorists who have ever been strong friends of the A. A. A., will bring sufficient pressure to bear to cause a division of the run from Albany to Boston, so that Friday night can be spent in that city, with the run to Boston on Saturday, July 19, instead of bringing the party through in one day.

Local Motorists Pleased.

Naturally enough, the local motorists, and especially the officers and members of the Bay State Association, are much pleased with this decision on the part of Chairman Hower and will do everything in their power to make the stay here interesting and enjoyable.

At that time the local club will be in a much better position to act the part of host than it is to-day and the house committee as well as all other committees will do their utmost to give the visitors a comprehensive idea of Boston and Bostonians. It is quite likely that the touring committee of the club will arrange for an outing on Saturday to some one of the many resorts in this section, Ferncroft, Tudor Farm Club, Cliff Club, or the Mayflower Inn, all of which places are decidedly popular with the local as well as the foreign tourists. Secretary V. A. Charles, of the touring committee of the Bay State, which consists of Charles E. A. Gilmore, Horace G. Kent and the writer, said:

"You can rest assured that the touring and all other club committees will do everything that lies in their power to make the visit [illegible]. There are many ways in which we can entertain the stranger within our gates and we shall immediately commence preparations for their entertainment as soon as word is received from the touring committee of the American Automobile Association."

The tour will again start from Buffalo and it is predicted that hundreds of automobile parties will make Buffalo for the Good Roads Convention, which precedes the start of the tour, and that the makers will take greater interest this year in the tour than was the case last year as the sixth annual is an event in which competition is brought down to the finest point, every car carrying observers, who must be men connected with the trade, for at least six months, and directly connected with the makers who nominate them.

The real truth will be ascertained in regard to the showing made by each car and in regard to the effect of tire troubles. There will be no fooling about this test, and as all makers sought just a contest like this, the entries will be received in greater numbers than ever.

Entries Will Be Late.

The early entry list has no bearing on the final results for entries invariably come in late for such an event. There are already in hand eighteen entries and inquiries which point certainly to forty more, while many will enter finally who have not been reckoned upon at all up to the present time.

The entry of three Greater Arrows by the George N. Pierce Co. in the contest for the A. A. A. trophy which this firm won twice and aided materially in winning last year, and two other Greater Arrows for the Hower trophy, is evidence of the interest being taken in the dual contests.

Chairman Hower has things well in hand for one of the most successful tours ever held. The route he has laid out comprises a trip over the Allegheny, the Blue Ridge, Pocono, Adirondack, Catskill, Berkshire, White and Green Mountain chains, and the prevalence of mountain roads will make this a great testing tour as well as a most enjoyable tour from the standpoint of scenic beauties.

Called the Mountain Tour.

F. Ed Spooner has named the event the "Mountain Tour," and as such it is likely to be known, as it covers so much mountainous country. The fact that this tour brings so much that is hard in the way of going is [illegible] to keep the entry list down to a respectable size, for many makers do not care to put cars into open competition over a course so difficult and a route which may prove their undoing. It is quite likely that only the best cars will be seen in this contest this year under the circumstances, and those who have rushed into the entry list right at the outset have shown confidence in their cars.

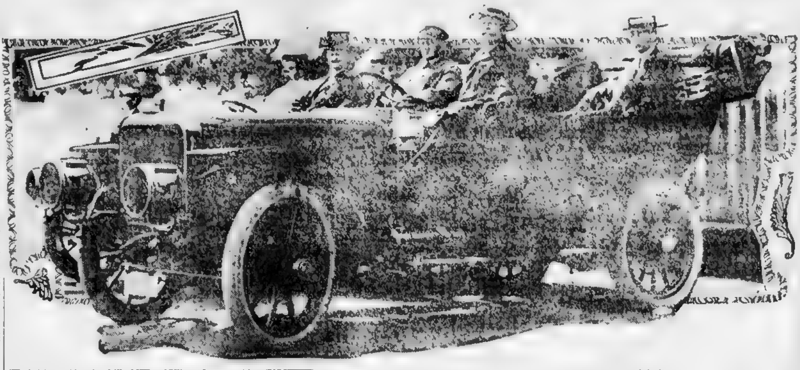
Since the race committee of the Bay State Automobile Association has gotten its annual Spring race meet out of the way the touring committee comes to the front with an attractive proposition in the way of a club pleasure outing to the Wentworth at Newcastle, N. H. Independence Day falling on a Saturday makes it possible to hold a two or a three-day outing without serious interference with the business affairs of life and so the committee has called a run for July 3, 4 and 5. This is to be purely a pleasure outing and no tests of endurance of cars or consumption of gasolene are to be considered, the idea being to as far as possible bring the members and their families into closer relationship and to revive the pleasant experiences of [illegible] the famous baseball game [illegible] and with Alfred M[illegible] of those who have [illegible] Arrows of Dan Cupid [illegible] surely be in a position [illegible] against those who have [illegible]. The committee has [illegible] upon just what [illegible] arranged for the members [illegible] it will furnish something [illegible] and unquestionably burn [illegible] as well as arranging for a [illegible] on one if not both evenings [illegible] stay in Newcastle.

In order that proper accommodations may be secured for all it is [illegible] immediately notify Secretary [illegible] of the committee just what is desired.

A. A. A.'S GOOD WORK.

"For such work as the American Automobile Association has done in arranging the first truly National Good Roads [illegible] at Buffalo next [illegible] nothing else, it is deserving of every sincere motorist," says Secretary F. H. Elliott, who is in charge of the executive offices at No. 437 Fifth avenue, New York.

GOV. CURTIS GUILD AND MRS. GUILD IN THE SIX-CYLINDER STEVENS-DURYEA



WHITTEN-GILMORE CO. WILL HANDLE ANOTHER FINE CAR

Enterprising Hub Firm to Represent Chalmers-Detroit Motor Company in 1909.

Announcement was made the latter part of the week by the Whitten-Gilmore Company that in addition to representing the E. R. Thomas Motor Company of Buffalo for Boston and Eastern Massachusetts for 1909 they would also represent the new Chalmers-Detroit Motor Company, who will market two cars, one the well-known and popular "Thomas Detroit Forty," now called "Chalmers-Detroit Forty," which will sell at $2,750, and the other a new four-passenger car of 24-30 horsepower to be called "Chalmers-Detroit Thirty" and to sell at $1,500.

[illegible] announcement for 1909 of the Whitten-Gilmore Company [illegible] Boston and Eastern Massachusetts [illegible] have developed a business on Thomas cars so large that [illegible] contracts [illegible] they were obliged to sign in order to secure the twelve months' output [illegible] one of the largest orders ever given by a Boston dealer, and is conclusive proof of what [illegible] think of the future of the automobile industry, at least as far as this section is concerned.

The cars which the Whitten-Gilmore company will handle for 1909 will range in price from $1,500 to $[illegible]. For the manufacturers the E. R. Thomas Motor Company [illegible] will consist of the well-known [illegible] Flyer, together with the big six-cylinder which has been a success from the start. A new addition to this line is a [illegible] which will be ready for delivery in August. The well-known Thomas [illegible] taxicabs will also be a feature as in 1908.

The Chalmers-Detroit Forty, known during the past year as the Thomas Detroit, will be practically the same with the exception of the springs [illegible] and will list at the same price as last year. [illegible] popularity of [illegible] model has never [illegible] the market [illegible].

This car is a four-cylinder 24-30 horsepower and will be built in both touring and runabout bodies. It is a reality, not a blue print, and although [illegible].

The wheel base is 110 inches, the wheels [illegible] inches, the weight is 2,000 pounds and the motor 24-30 horsepower [illegible].

[illegible] can secure the number of cars which will be necessary to meet the demand in the next ten or twelve months.

They will have demonstrators of both Chalmers cars about July 15, and deliveries will follow soon after. They advise [illegible] purchasers, however, to place [illegible] order in order to secure an early delivery [illegible].

A new feature of interest in the A. A. A. touring contest for the Glidden trophy this year will be the observer's records of tire troubles. It is not certain as yet how [illegible] these records will be beyond [illegible] may be put down on the observer's card [illegible] A. Parker, of the Automobile Club of America [illegible] the contest should be [illegible] in conjunction with that for the Glidden trophy, but it was decided this would complicate matters too much. The tire makers do much to help along the national touring contest every year, and there is a sentiment in favor of more attention being paid to the performances of tires in the contest. Regarding the matter a representative tire maker, H. G. Fisk of the Fisk Rubber Company, says:

"The Glidden tour is the best event there is for practical test of tires as well as [illegible] of cars, and it seems a pity that the [illegible] very [illegible] way. [illegible] cannot [illegible] as much about [illegible] performance [illegible] of the cars [illegible] spend considerable [illegible] as something of a check on deceptive announcements concerning the absence of [illegible]. If the tire makers [illegible] a very satisfactory [illegible] by the observers with [illegible]."

FRANKLIN CARS IN A. A. A. TOUR

When the [illegible] A. A. A. [illegible] will [illegible] in [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] hereto [illegible] tour [illegible] one of the [illegible] did not [illegible] less able [illegible] which [illegible] were [illegible] looked [illegible] reliability [illegible] of the [illegible] severe and [illegible] for the [illegible] is an air [illegible] will [illegible] gives somewhat of a distinction to this particular entry.

FORD CARS MADE A FINE SHOWING

Now that the [illegible] Automobile Club re[illegible] it is interesting [illegible] performances of [illegible] in this event. How [illegible] was to the cars may be best judged by the small number of [illegible] can be known [illegible] is presented [illegible] stop on the road. [illegible] small two-seated cars the fifteen horsepower American Ford was [illegible] to make a non-stop, though [illegible] horsepower Rover was very [illegible] had its trouble on the last day, a broken dumb iron; otherwise it would have had a clean record.

As regards speed in this [illegible] the Ford made the fastest time in both the hill [illegible] on [illegible] the three [illegible] horsepower [illegible] the [illegible] hill and on [illegible].

[illegible] all-around performance was won by the Ford 15-18 horsepower, thus [illegible] repeating its performance of last year.

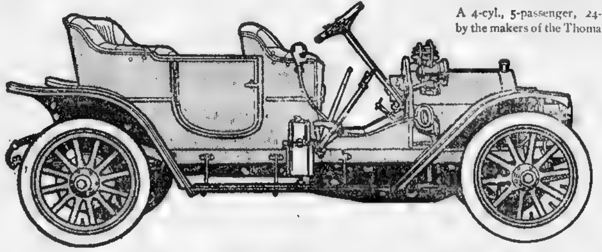
BUICK CO. WILL HAVE BRANCH HERE

The surprise of the week came with the unofficial announcement that the Buick Motor Co. was to establish its own branch in this city, it having but just taken over the establishment in the Motor Mart heretofore [illegible] as a salesroom by the [illegible]. The information regarding [illegible] of a branch [illegible] somewhat meagre [illegible] a well established [illegible] has been [illegible] and for the time [illegible] in charge of Mr. J. P. [illegible] representative of the company [illegible] W. C. Durant and Mr. [illegible] city for a week [illegible] official announcement [illegible].

The establishment of the branch will make it possible for the company to carry out its general policy of looking after its customers by expert service of the same [illegible] and will unquestionably do much toward advancing the interests of the Buick [illegible] in [illegible] New England [illegible].

FAST LIMOUSINE CAR.

Motorists have thought that cars with limousine bodies were not adapted for fast speeding, but [illegible] De Fere, a New York lawyer, recently proved this to be a mistaken idea. While driving his Hotchkiss limousine to his home on Long Island he speeded the machine, as he was in a hurry. Before he had traveled many miles he was hailed by a motor cycle policeman and taken before a magistrate, where he [illegible] his car at the [illegible]. He paid [illegible].



Ready for Delivery

Chalmers-Detroit

"It's a good car"

A 4-cyl., 5-passenger, 24-30 h.-p. Made by the makers of the Thomas-Detroit Forty.

This Astounding Car

For $1,500

A millionaire's car brought, by mammoth production, down within reach of the many. Looks like the costliest cars—does all that the costliest do. Yet, so low in price—so economical in upkeep—that fifty times as many people can now own a powerful, high-grade car.

For two years—after we perfected the Thomas-Detroit Forty—we have worked to perfect this car.

Not to sell at $1,500; for nobody dreamed, two years ago, that such a car could ever be sold for that. We simply aimed at perfection in a light-weight car—a car with low cost of upkeep. We expected the cost to run at least $2,000.

But the panic last fall cut the prices of materials, and we are giving you the benefit of our ability to purchase ahead.

Low-priced cars are not new; there will be more this year than ever. Rivals may follow us with four-cylinder cars costing even less than this.

But the novelty lies in a car that you can take pride in—a large and luxurious car—a perfect and powerful car—selling at a price like this.

There we have no competition. Not a car selling within $500 of our price can stand for a moment in actual comparison with the Chalmers-Detroit.

Note that this car is not an experiment—not a hasty makeshift. We have worked for over two years in perfecting it. Three of the new cars have been run over 7,000 miles.

Designed by Mr. H. E. Coffin, our vice-president, for years the chief designer of the Thomas Companies. He is recognized as the leading automobile designer in America.

Mr. Coffin made two trips to Europe to combine in this car the best foreign features with the best American. He has thus made it the typical car of today.

The lines are handsome, yet conservative. The car follows, in this respect, the leading cars of the year. The finish and upholstering are the same as are found in cars costing double this price.

The wheel base is 110 inches—compare that with rival cars. We have only a 2-inch longer base in our $2,750 car. The frame of the Chalmers-Detroit is exactly the same as in our Detroit-Forty.

Thus we give you a roomy and elegant five-passenger car—not a car that looks cheap, because small.

Weight 2,000 pounds, which means a low tire cost, a low cost of upkeep. Power 24-30 h. p.—sufficient for any requirement. Speed 45 to 50 miles per hour.

The four cylinders are cast together, as in the latest Fiat, the Darracq, and a score of great foreign cars. Our factory cost on this engine alone is $264. Yet 4-cylinder automobile engines are sold as low as $75.

We use the Unit Power Plant, as in the new Decauville, the Motobloc and others. Motor, clutch and transmission form a single unit, so they cannot get out of alignment.

The body is suspended, for easy riding, after the style of the Mercedes. The valves are like those of the Napier. The ¾ Elliptic Springs are like the Renault and others.

Selective sliding gear transmission; three speeds forward and reverse. Perfect dust protection.

As completely fitted with annular ball bearings as the Mercedes, Hotchkiss and Renault. Very few of the costliest American cars use so many. The actual cost of the ball bearings in this car is $103.

Brakes heavier than we used, until this year, on our "Forty." Anti-backing device to protect you on hills. Double ignition system.

The lubrication system which is now used on the "Forty" and which is being adopted on all leading cars. A multiple disc clutch—similar to that used on the Isotta, Fiat and many others. The gas intake is water-jacketed, to save you the trouble arising through cold gasoline.

Floating type rear axle, used heretofore only on the highest-priced cars. Wheels 32 inches; tires 3½ inches.

So simple in control that a novice can master the car in ten minutes.

Compare these features, one by one, with the costliest cars. You will note we have stinted nowhere. We did not start out to make this a cheap car.

Then compare the same features with other low-priced cars, and you will see why we have no competition.

Please send this coupon now for our catalog. The cars are almost ready. Our contracts for materials are only sufficient for 2,500 cars. After that the price must advance if materials advance. So please get the facts at once, so as to decide if you want one.

Makers of the Thomas-Detroit Forty.
Now called the Chalmers-Detroit [illegible]

HUGH CHALMERS, President.
Successors to E. R. Thomas-Detroit Co.

This change in name involves no change in ownership, personnel or management. It is simply made to avoid the confusion of two Thomas concerns operating on separate lines.

ANNOUNCEMENT

We are pleased to announce that we shall represent the Chalmers Detroit Motor Co. in Boston and Eastern Massachusetts.

The car described in the adjoining columns is the real (not merely the blue print) sensation for the 1909 season, and we anticipate an enormous demand for it.

For the higher priced and greater powered offering we shall continue to sell what has been known as the "Thomas Detroit Forty" for $2750, now called the "Chalmers Forty," which for $2750 is as great relatively in real merit and excellence as the model described. We shall be pleased to refer prospective buyers of this car to every single owner of a 1907 or 1908 car in our territory both as to the car itself, as well as the policy of our company in doing business.

Deliveries for both models will begin the latter part of July. The allotment for our territory is not more than half as large as we can sell. We, therefore, make this proposition: Deliveries will be made in the rotation of orders accepted. Demonstrating cars will not reach us before July 15th. Intending purchasers are hereby invited to place their provisional orders with us and make delivery protection deposit.

When our demonstrating cars arrive and you inspect and test them thoroughly, and when the car scheduled for your order arrives, then if you are not more than satisfied with your purchase, and if your car is not even better than this advertisement would lead you to believe, your order is cancelled and deposit promptly returned.

We want to send descriptive literature to every person in Eastern Massachusetts who is in the market—or who may later be in the market—for a strictly high quality automobile, and who wants $2.50 in comparative value for every $1.00 they spend with us.

Please, if interested, fill out the inquiry coupon and mail it to us at once.

Grand Opera Singers Open Engagement at the Majestic

SUMMER CROWDS FILL BOSTON THEATRES, DRAWN BY POPULAR BILLS.

Again Boston is to [illegible] grand opera. There was the Metro[illegible] from New York, the San Car[illegible] [illegible] the Knickerbocker at the Majestic a few weeks ago, and now [illegible] the fourth company under the [illegible] of A. Floryn's Grand Opera Co[illegible]. [illegible] is the [illegible] appearance in Bos[illegible] of the Floryn [illegible].

They open [illegible] afternoon, as they will play [illegible] every day. The [illegible] bill will [illegible] same as the evening bill and the [illegible] for the opening week is as follows: M[illegible] Faust, Tuesday Carmen, W[illegible] Trovatore, Thursday Aida, Frid[illegible] Faust, Saturday, Traviata.

At the head of the soloists is Mme Frery, a lyric and dramatic soprano, who comes from the Royal Opera House in Brussels to this country for the first time. Supporting her are Mlle De Blanca, contralto, Mme Anita Perego, soprano and recently with the San Carlo company, Messrs. Vinzenio Barrille and A. Giacconba, tenors, M. Olinda Lombardi, basso, and M. C. Montella, baritone.

For music the company has Roman F. Cras's Belgian Band of fifty players, which has played with the Metropolitan and the Sousa organizations.

The company has an innovation for Boston in that it brings its own stage, a portable affair especially designed to give the best acoustic facilities for opera work. In rendering the operas they have been so arranged as to leave intact the most famous portions of each work. For the run of this midsummer musical festival a scale of popular prices will prevail.

Miss Gordon Returns.

Miss Eleanor Gordon returns to the Boston Theatre tomorrow after a week's absence to play the role of Mary Larkins in Clyde Fitch's drama "Lover's Lane," which the stock company will put on for the week.

"Lover's Lane," one of the earlier Fitch plays, had tremendous vogue in spite of its simple story of country life. The strong part of the Rev. Thomas Singleton will be played by Wilson Melrose. Mary Sanders will be the irrepressible Simplicity Johnson and the other roles will be acceptably filled by the stock company players.

The change from the farce comedy of "A Texas Steer" will doubtless be pleasing to patrons, giving them a little more serious variety of entertainment, yet one not too heavy for mid-summer.

Elsie Phelan's Debut.

Miss Elsie Gertrude Phelan of Somerville, noted at amateur entertainments, chamber concerts and similar gatherings here, makes her debut as a vaudeville entertainer at Keith's Theatre this week. She will be the leading feature in a bill prepared particularly in view of the convention here of the Federation of Women's Clubs.

She will present a pianologue made up of songs and instrumental pieces of her own composition.

Other acts in the bill include Gallagher and Barrett, in their travesty skit, "The Battle of Too Soon," J. K. Murray and Clara Lane, in an operetta sketch, the Six American Dancers, Bedini and Arthur, the comedy jugglers, Raymond and Caverly, the "Leading Germans," Vernon, the ventriloquist, Burns and McCone, the humorous acrobats, Louis Gravat, with whistling solos, Harry Burgoyne, with English comic songs, Bernier and Stella, in song and dance; Martinez and Martinez, the versatile musicians, and the Kinetograph films.

Second Month of Fun.

Tomorrow "A Knight for a Day" begins its second month at the Tremont Theatre, with no sign of abatement in merriment and attendance. [illegible] laughing [illegible], has [illegible] working overtime at every performance with John [illegible] Slavin and May Vokes as comedy leads, with William Carleton and charming [illegible] Lilja in the romantic roles, and with Mae [illegible] Lexton, [illegible] Dewey, Madge Vo[illegible], [illegible] and others [illegible] parts.

The [illegible] pictures of [illegible] of the [illegible] well the expression [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] straight [illegible] high [illegible] which bring [illegible] time and again.

The piece is well staged, the chorus girls are [illegible] songs linger in the mind [illegible] the more [illegible] song and whistled [illegible] "The [illegible] "See Saw," "The [illegible]," Hurray and [illegible] Out the Front Do[illegible].

Bowdoin Sq. Melodrama.

Her [illegible] comes to the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week, a strong melodrama [illegible] with the adventures of a Madam De Cova, who succeeds in marrying J[illegible]. She proves to be an adventuress of the boldest type.

Brace of Burlesques.

The vaudeville [illegible] program includes Peck and [illegible] Smith and [illegible] Tanner and [illegible] Vyner in a com[illegible] on the Palace stage.

Strong Men at the Museum.

Sandow and Lambert, the famous teachers of physical culture, [illegible] one of the big features at Austin & Stone's Museum this week. They will give exhibitions of their [illegible] number of different [illegible]. Glenfield, the ventriloquist, is another [illegible] Ouivette the illusionist [illegible] wonderful program, and Fowler's Boys Band and Symphony Orchestra, which show itself [illegible] offer both classical and up-to-date musical numbers.

In addition to this variety there is the regular theatre bill in which the Manhattan Girls play a leading part. The Manhattanites have a sensible novelty for the week with Dorothy Norton and the Misses Dale, Amos, Lester, Allen, Vernon French, Lawrence, Davidson, Nye, Bernice and Bell as entertainers. In the [illegible] show will be the Marron Comedy Company in a fun skit, [illegible] the Bas[illegible] [illegible] Trio, Joni and Pearl Smith and Herbert and Rogers.

With the Moving Pictures.

The Bijou Dream has an extra feature this week in the Crescent City Quartette, a company of male singers. The grand opera numbers for the week include a solo by Caruso from "Martha," [illegible] from "Lucretia Borgia," solo by Schumann Heink, duet from "Trovatore" and "Ro[illegible] Cigada." Among other features will be an illustrated lecture on Japan.

There will be new songs and new picture films at the Star Theatre for the week. The songs will include "When the Springtime Brings the Roses, Jessie Dear," and "Pride of the Prairie, Mary." There will be the usual Sunday concert tonight.

New arrangement of songs, ballads and motion pictures are scheduled for the week at the Theatre Comique. The musical numbers will be by Katherine Hawkins, Marjorie Bray, Alice Grenach and Caroline McDougall. There will be impersonations by Johnson and Cusack and vocal numbers by William Keith, Lillian Lord, Grace Palmer and Margaret Webber.

At the Hub Theatre the week's bill includes the baseball ballad by Ben Loring, a semi-classic by Miss May Waite, a catchy song by Miss Blanche Parquette, Miles Brothers motion pictures and an up-to-date specialty by Aurlemma, Loring, Miss White and Miss Parquette.

New songs, new motion picture films, and a cool, comfortable atmosphere make the Scenic Temple delightful for all. The big auditorium can be filled to seating capacity, yet the individual patron does not feel crowded. The program is up to date and all subjects are carefully selected.

At the Premiere Theatre there is a new program for tomorrow, with another change in mid week. The motion pictures amuse and instruct at the same time. New songs, well sung by competent vocalists, with excellent incidental music, are characteristics of the Premiere.

Free Show at Wonderland.

The free shows at Wonderland continue to amaze patrons. In addition to the band concerts by the Salem Cadet Band, the free park parade, or the "Big Ballyhoo," as it is called in amusement technique, there is the special program of wonderful vaudeville and entertainment acts. Sensational among these has been the daring Death Dip by Mlle. Novi in her automobile, in which she turns a triple somersault at lightning speed. Today Mlle. Novi's engagement closes. At 5 and 10 p. m. today come the last two chances for Boston fans to see her this season.

Yesterday a new and high-class free entertainment feature came to Wonderland in the Three Dekoe Sisters, European artists, on the high tight wire. The acts of the Dekoe Sisters are surpassed by none in the tight wire business.

During the past week the Five Flying Rosses have been so popular that their booking is renewed for the coming week.

LINER YALE HOLDS HONEYMOON RECORD

Turbiner Harvard May Capture Speed Dashes, but Rival Crew Doesn't Care.

The turbine steamer Harvard may have cut the speed record of the Yale, its sister ship, by a narrow [illegible] margin, but the Yale is still triumphant in the line of bridal couples.

From the day that the all-water route between New York and Boston was resumed by these two vessels there has been various kinds of rivalry, for traffic and for speed records.

But the rivalry for bridal couples was the natural built. It has happened that on every run the Yale has made between this point and New York she has had one or more bridal couples aboard.

The Harvard has quite a number to its credit, but not so many as the Yale. Hence the Yale esteems itself the honeymoon favorite.

As a matter of fact, the Harvard is [illegible] couples behind. The boats were [illegible] at an average of one and one [illegible] couples for the season trips so far made. But during the past week the Yale forged ahead. On one trip from New York [illegible] she had four bridal couples. On the return trip she took out two honeymoon sets to New York. This boosted up the Yale's average, but the Harvard now is quite a little behind.

For Yale [illegible] says that the Harvard can have the speed record if it wants it, but [illegible] for [illegible] every time.

[illegible] is making a record for speed as well as for honeymoon [illegible]. The regular schedule of [illegible] hours for the all-water trip has [illegible] again and again. The Yale [illegible] it down to four [illegible] hours and then [illegible] five minutes off from that. [illegible] the speed gets down [illegible] the Harvard officers and [illegible] the Harvard's record will stand for a while.

SEASHORE PROPERTY IN GREAT DEMAND

RANDOLPH IS "SPOTLESS"

By the Investigator.

Seashore property proved to be popular at Adams Shore, Quincy, on June 17. Early in the day little bands of home-seekers began to gather and look over the land on the electric car line about a mile from the centre of the city of Quincy. The attractiveness of this place lies in the combination of country and seashore facilities. It is high and dry and parts of it are well wooded. The beach is sandy and the decline toward the deep water is gradual. Toward the left of the property is a long public wharf which extends into the harbor over three hundred feet. Directly in front is the open passageway to the ocean for steamships and other sailing craft. One may also see in the distance Thompson's Island and other points of interest, while to the right looms up Nantasket and its varied attractions.

Over sixteen cottages and bungalows have been built here. These are well proportioned dwellings with nearly all of the modern improvements. Their design in architecture varies here and there, giving a rich and inviting appearance to the surroundings. Care has been shown in maintaining types of houses which will be entirely consistent with the natural beauty of the place.

The bathing here is excellent, for this stretch of land is protected on both sides by the outlying islands, so that the water is generally calm and at a temperature that is [illegible] and appealing to the most exacting of bathers. It is likewise a splendid locality for the anchorage of yachts and other sailing vessels. It is only thirty minutes away from the din and turmoil of city traffic.

The sale last Wednesday was attended by a large number of people, who responded well to the hospitality of Atwood & Pattee, who made every one happy with their outlay of refreshments, besides giving them [illegible].

Sell Eighty-five Lots in a Day.

Eighty-five lots were sold on Bunker Hill Day. Among those who were present were many representative persons in all circles of life who are not often present when seashore lots are sold. But these lots were unusually good and above the average. Many have had them in mind for years and were glad of the opportunity when they were thrown open to the public for sale. [illegible] purchasers bought ten lots at figures [illegible] cents a foot.

The promoters of this property have set apart another day, June 27, when they propose to close out the remaining lots.

Mr. Atwood, in referring to the sale to the Investigator declared: "Why, it is the best land sale we've ever seen. There was no trouble in selling the lots. People saw at a glance what this property is. They know that it will double in valuation in a few years. Seashore lots, as every one knows, around Boston, are getting scarce and this location, the quality of the land, the dignified air of the surroundings, naturally appealed to them."

June 17 marked a red letter day for Homeward Terrace, where lots have been rapidly selling for the past few weeks. Their nearness to the car lines which pass the property, as well as the reasonable terms upon which they are offered, have appealed to many people of average means. Here the land has been leveled off and streets cut through, making a very desirable locality within city limits. The H. S. Moody Land Company gave their patrons and their new friends a royal welcome with a real Rhode Island clambake.

A spot was chosen on the hill surrounded with trees, where extensive preparations were begun in the day to accommodate the crowds. Here stones were piled together and on them a huge fire was started under the superintendence of H. B. Hawkins of Lakewood, R. I.

After the stones were heated seaweed was placed over them, and then barrels of clams were emptied and the heat was confined with coverings of cloth and sand.

The people watched the proceedings with a great deal of interest and enjoyed the event, sitting among the clusters of shade trees, and were kept in excellent humor not only by the unique sight of seeing the clambake, which was new to many, but by the efforts of the promoters to give everybody a good time. There was a bountiful supply of potatoes and brown bread besides the clams.

The company has sold over 400 lots and is now preparing to give premiums to those who have bought a number of lots, as well as to those who have been instrumental in selling lots. These premiums are so arranged that no purchaser of lots is overlooked.

Many who have bought lots here told the Investigator that this was their first opportunity to get a lot or lots within city limits at a reasonable figure. Modest homes will soon mark this spot, which only a year ago was a wilderness of trees and shrubs, but now has been cleared and made attractive with streets and other city advantages.

In "Spotless Town."

Taking the car from Mattapan Square through Milton to the borders of Randolph, one comes in sight of a land development project known as "Spotless town." It is reached after leaving the car line by a five minutes' walk along a well travelled thoroughfare shaded by oaks and elms. The foliage is beautiful all around here and on an eminence overlooking a lake over a half mile wide, the forests have been cleared, streets have been cut through and on these different avenues amid trees and varied shrubs, over twenty-one houses of a simple design and mostly serviceable for Summer use have been built.

In "Spotless Town" there are households enjoying a Summer home that, were conditions otherwise, might be deprived of these advantages. The land has been sold on reasonable terms. Every family of united means can afford to have a Summer home. This is demonstrated here in this locality. A home here can be constructed of old lumber bought for a mere song and in very little time turned into a very comfortable dwelling. To see a wilderness changed into a happy community, full of [illegible] children [illegible] from the heat and [illegible] of a large city, enjoying the [illegible] attractions of a beautiful lake has been done upon this tract. G. W. Bartlett is the promoter [illegible] land development.

The demand for homes within [illegible] minutes of Boston is well supplied [illegible] advantages of such a locality as Ashcroft Heights. The ten-cent fare [illegible] popularized this section and over [illegible] dred houses have been built. It is picturesque country all about here with high land, 150 feet above the sea level, besides being a healthy spot with its [illegible] advantages of good schools, good water and good transportation service, it encourages one to carry out into practice the ownership of your own house. [illegible] houses to rent and many [illegible] have chosen this locality as their home and their own dwellings which they have purchased and paid for by regular and systematic payments.

Toward the north is Bellevue Hill and tower, also parts of Stony Brook Reservation in its wooded, picturesque setting. Hyde Park lies to the east, and [illegible] southeast one gets an unbroken view of the great Blue Hill and the famous country estates of Milton.

This is a rapidly developing [illegible] where lots are selling at [illegible] which in a few years [illegible] advance as property is in [illegible] through this section. [illegible] in a two-family house [illegible] best [illegible] south of Boston.

"Edenfield" is the name of a new land development on Main street, Watertown, where lots are selling from $120 to $400. [illegible] near the [illegible] section of the town and accessible to steam and electric cars. The property is flanked by Waverley street on the Watertown approach and by Lexington street from the Waltham side. [illegible] of location and is sold upon a basis of weekly payments.

Scituate Harbor and the [illegible] has [illegible] of recent [illegible]. Most of the recent buyers of lots are friends of those who have spent the Summer [illegible] own homes [illegible] for some years past. On June 17 a number of sales were made by Edward T. Harrington [illegible] from $2[illegible] to $[illegible]. They are sold upon easy terms. The Hatherley road, one of the most popular avenues in the town, connects with the State road, and makes one of the [illegible] approaches to this [illegible] community.

Everett still maintains its popularity for small houses. "It is a good place for a man of small means," said a real estate [illegible]. "I'm kept [illegible] selling [illegible] and those on May and Tyler [illegible] are very popular."

"The widening of Washington street from [illegible] street [illegible] line, so as to make a boulevard 100 feet in width, will tend to popularize much good property along the line of improvements. Twenty-five years ago land sold here for $30 [illegible] and today it commands 15 cents a foot, and will gradually go up higher. When completed with grass plots in the centre and a double [illegible] electric with less congestion in [illegible] this part of [illegible] section of Newer Boston."

SINKS TO DEATH AS BOYS TRY TO AID

Portsmouth, N. H., June 20.—Just graduating from the Portsmouth High School, and ready to take Monday his entrance examination for Harvard, John Griffin, Jr., the seventeen-year-old son of ex-Alderman John Griffin of State street, this city, was drowned this afternoon in Cur[illegible].

[illegible] year-old brother, Philip, and [illegible] M. Williams, fifteen years old, of [illegible] avenue with whom young Griffin [illegible] to the cove to enjoy a swim, [illegible] efforts to save the sinking [illegible] got a grip on him, but the [illegible] boy pulled them under water, and they were forced to struggle to save their own lives.

The two boys reached the shore and ran [illegible] for help. A bystander ran down to the shore, but young Griffin did not come to the surface.

The body was recovered by the police about half an hour after the accident and removed to the home of his parents.

Young Griffin was very popular with his classmates and others throughout the city. He had taken a postgraduate course at the high school, receiving his diploma yesterday. He intended to enter Harvard, from which university an older brother, William, now a civil engineer, graduated a few years ago.

LAYS WIFE TO REST; DIES ON VERANDAH

But a few hours after he had seen the body of his wife laid at rest in Woodlawn Cemetery, Dr. D. T. Brigham, sixty-eight years old, a dentist living at No. 5 Thane street, Dorchester, was stricken and died while taking the air on his piazza early yesterday morning. His wife died last Monday and she was buried Thursday.

EXPRESS CRUSHES HANDCAR; 2 KILLED

Lawrence, June 20.—Section Foreman John J. Donovan of the Boston & Maine Railroad, uncle of Manager Patsy Donovan of the Brooklyn National Baseball team, and Trackman James Greaney were killed this afternoon when the northbound Manchester express on the Western division of the main line crashed into a handcar on which Donovan and Greaney were riding with eight other section men.

The eight other men saw the express in time, jumped and saved themselves. Donovan and Greaney, seated back to the oncoming train, had no warning except the scattering of their fellow-employes. Before they could move they were hit by the engine, hurled many feet in the air and killed.

The tragedy occurred on a long siding between Andover and this city. By mistake the siding switch from the main line was open. The express was thrown to the siding rails and crashed into the handcar, only twenty feet distant, with full-speed momentum.

Express Dashes Onto Siding.

The express continued till it ran to the other end of the siding, where the switch had been set for the main track. On the main track the express was stopped and the train crew hurried out to investigate.

Section Foreman Donovan, sixty years old, lived at No. 22 Durham street, this city. He had a wife and seven children. Greaney lived at No. 91 Springfield street, this city, was twenty-seven years old and single.

Foreman Donovan had been working with his crew widening a ledge near the siding. The men finished their work early in the afternoon, loaded their tools on the handcar, jumped aboard the car and were all ready to start for home when the express came along.

Switch Opened by Mistake.

It is said that the switch had been closed, but that a yardman, thinking it left open, went to close it, as he thought, but instead re-opened it, allowing the express to take the siding.

The backs of both Donovan and Greaney were broken by the impact of the engine. Greaney's left leg was smashed so that the bone protruded below the knee. The back of Donovan's head was crushed in.

Until the platform is built by the Denver convention, the market will probably be [illegible].

The question of the gold movement again came into prominence this week by reason of the exceptionally heavy shipments. In the opinion of many the reduction of the [illegible] of Germany's discount rate three weeks ago marked the end of the gold outflow to Berlin, and for a time such seemed to be the case. But last week's export put a different face on the matter. Wednesday alone $12,000,000 gold was taken for export to Germany. The largest shipment since May 19, this unexpected development is all the more remarkable because the gold that goes is all coin.

Exports, large as they are, are still less than half of the gold which was brought here last November and December.

Our merchandise export balance furnishes [illegible] for the strength of exchange or the outflow of gold. Owing to the cutting [illegible] of imports, the balance in our favor is getting larger steadily and is running ahead of last year.

Mother Asks Help in Finding Son Last Heard of in the West.

[illegible] pathetic requests ever made [illegible] Sunday American's Tracer [illegible] one from a young married [illegible] Lynn signing herself "[illegible]" [illegible] asking help in establishing [illegible].

The writer says that she was a foundling left on the steps at No. 1 Pine street, Boston, twenty-four years ago, by a person unknown. She is married and very anxious to find out who and what her parents are or were.

Shunning publicity on such a personal matter, she encloses her right name and address, but requests that only the name of "Doubtful" be used in the story.

The writer has placed a hard task for the Tracer of lost persons to accomplish [illegible] possible publicity to the story [illegible] the few circumstances surrounding the [illegible] babe of a quarter century ago [illegible] may develop.

The letter written by "Doubtful" is from Lynn, under date of June 19, and reads:

"Having read so many times of your helping people to be united once more with their families, I am trying to see if you can help me find my relatives. I am now twenty-four years old. Sometime between February 5 and March 4, 1884, I was left at No. 1 Pine st., Boston. I was taken [illegible] Police [illegible] Mission and [illegible] the City [illegible] Home [illegible] [illegible] who lived at No. 1 Pine street twenty-four years ago.

"I am [illegible] it is a hard task to find any one who might know something about it, but I am going to try and see if it won't [illegible].

"I know that the 'Boston American' is taken in thousands of homes and possibly some one may see this and give me the desired information.

"Any information, no matter how small, may help me to find some relative and it will be gratefully received."

Anxious for Lost Boy.

Another inquiry also comes from Lynn this week, as follows:

Here is a widowed mother who wants to locate her missing son and who writes to the Tracer of Lost Persons:

"After reading about the wonderful work in your paper in finding lost persons, I appeal to you to help me find my lost boy, who went away in the Fall of 1905. He was last heard from in Colorado Springs, where he was [illegible] in a hotel. I [illegible] to the chief of police of that city [illegible] that the boy had gone to [illegible]. This is the last I have heard [illegible] named Leroy Bubler. He [illegible] years of age, five feet [illegible], dark brown eyes [illegible].

Airship at Paragon.

tures at Paragon, everyone in the park Lincoln Beachey and his dirigible airship, with which he won first prize at the International contest for airships at St. Louis last October, is at Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, for a limited engagement. He arrived there yesterday, and is making daily flights in his wonderful aerial craft.

Beachey is one of the many free features, having ample opportunity to examine the airship at close range. He demonstrates particularly the absolute control he has over his vessel of the air. At some time during his engagement here Beachey will make an airship trip from Paragon Park to Boston and return.

The other free features and the concessions at the park are drawing thousands of admiring patrons. Colonel Francis Ferari's trained wild animals are very popular. Farrington's new Olympic Theatre has a strong vaudeville programme. The Palm Garden is heavily patronized. Among the free open-air circus features are Dynamo, the electric marvel; the Bonetti Brothers, in a sensational trapeze act; the Todesca Keating Trio, daring cyclists, and [illegible] Bonetti, in his death-defying "Slide for Life."

Fun at Norumbega.

There is a rattling good bill at the Norumbega Park Theatre this week. Prince and Virginia are funny in comedy singing and talking. The Vissochi Brothers whistle, sing and dance delightfully, with accordion solos and duets to boot. The Four Juggling Johnsons put on club work, balancing and juggling. Quigley Brothers have an original skit, "The Toll Gate," which is a scream. The O'Brien Troupe appear in acrobatics and the kinetograph has new pictures.

Rush to Lexington Park.

Since its recent opening Lexington Park has had more patronage than ever before at this season of the year. The picnic grounds, the zoo, the groves, the free swings and other attractions draw continuously. For the week at the open-air theatre Solaret, the "Queen of Light," is a whole entertainment in herself, with her fire dances and other terpsichorean acts.

Eleanor Gordon Returns to the Boston Theatre — Other Houses Change Bills.

Torelli's dog and pony circus, Queen and Ross, the singing and dancing comedians, Gordon and Chacon, the dusky artists; Lowell B. Drew the boy monologist and impersonator, and the Floyds in magic and mystery, comprise the program.

Ever Go Deep-Sea Fishing?

The deep-sea fishing steamer King Philip, which sails daily and Sunday from Commercial Wharf at 10 o'clock, is being patronized by men and also by many women. The latter find a day's fishing for cod and haddock exhilarating sport.

LINERS RACE FROM HUB TO LIVERPOOL

Jolly College Boys, on Way to Olympic Games, Sail as Cattlemen.

Some hundreds of [illegible] racing [illegible] between this port and Liverpool, and though neither [illegible] class, both are [illegible] each is making endeavoring to [illegible] pool first. The Leyland liner Winifredian was the first to sail on the long race from Boston yesterday afternoon, getting away thirty minutes ahead of her rival, the White Star liner Cymric.

Ordinarily the Cymric would be the one best bet, but the conditions are not equal. While the Winifredian is just out of dry dock the Cymric has not been in dry dock for [illegible]. Further, General Manager W. H. Harrison of the Leyland line [illegible] Winifredian [illegible] [illegible] the Leyland liners [illegible] good [illegible].

Cattlemen From College.

Two parties of college boys signed on as cattlemen on the ships, that being the one and only way they could find to get within seeing distance of the Olympic games. The [illegible] hung a small [illegible] until assigned to berths on one or the other ships, and then began to root for their ship.

When the Winifredian sailed half an hour ahead of the Cymric the [illegible] band of fourteen Harvard [illegible] were [illegible] cheer, [illegible] party of [illegible] friends on the pier. But [illegible] [illegible] think much of [illegible] anyhow, [illegible] with a [illegible] of [illegible] seem [illegible] first class [illegible] "Twinkle twinkle little star."

The Cymric's boys were from Yale, Chicago University and the University of Illinois, with one lone Harvard man thrown in. They promised themselves a regular jolly time going over, but the old-time cattlemen say they will learn something.

School Ma'ams on Board.

The Winifredian passenger list contained 1,115 names, thirty-two being those of them. There was one party of seventy-two Wisconsin and Ohio school [illegible] board. Another party of [illegible] New York, Miss Bessie Creighton of Lynn, Miss Marguerite Barr, Miss Eleanor Baxter and Miss Louise Taylor of Winchester and Miss Lucinda Peacock of Dover, N. H., under the chaperonage of Miss Atwood's mother.

John B. McCabe of East Boston was a passenger on the Winifredian, being off for the Olympic games.

On the Cymric was a party of 109 delegates to the third International council of the Congregational church to be held in Edinburgh, Scotland, beginning June 30.

Girls to Fight Bare Knuckles for Title of "Queen" of Gang

Miss Alice Fallon, girl victim of young Roxbury ruffians. Mis taken for a member of a rival gang she was severely pummeled and was only saved from more serious injury by the interference of older people.

Youthful Bands in Bitter Rivalry Plan for Battle on Roxbury 'Prairie'; Innocent Victim Roughly Used.

Unless Captain "Tom" Evans of Dudley street police station and his policemen interfere, the boys and girls of "Gang 78" [illegible] night before the [illegible] to decide which [illegible] band shall be "queen" of the combined cohorts.

That sounds like an extract from a Captain Kidd dime novel story instead of an advance notice about anything in a civilized community.

"Gang 78," "boys and girls," "queen of the gang"?

That's just it. Two bands of boys and girls, ranging from ten to [illegible] years, are planning to [illegible] fight [illegible] queen [illegible]. All fight will [illegible] scrap [illegible].

Just a single sample of the rowdyism that prevails among some of the juveniles of that district is the pummeling given Miss Alice Fallon of No. 23 [illegible] avenue, and her elder sister, Elizabeth, by Gang 78, which mistook them for members of [illegible] 39.

Alice was sent on an errand by her mother. At the corner of Langdon and Dudley streets she was intercepted by boys and girls of the 78's, [illegible] to Alice: "Come on and fight our Queen."

The Queen of the 78's was there, ready for battle, but Alice, not being a member of these gangs, gasped out, "I am no [illegible] I don't want to fight."

But the 78's thought she belonged to the 39's. So, before she could get away she was [illegible] fainted. Her sister Elizabeth, who started to her rescue, was knocked down and kicked. People interfered and Alice was borne to a neighboring house and revived.

Later Elizabeth said:

"I was hit in the face and knocked down in the street. I saw that Alice had fainted from the beating she had received. When I tried to help her I was knocked flat. When I started up someone knocked me down again. When I did escape someone had taken Alice into a house."

Mrs. Fallon, mother of the girls, says [illegible] Alice [illegible] mistaken for some other girl.

"She does not belong to either of those gangs," said the mother, "she was beaten and kicked for nothing. I consider it [illegible] and I reported the assault to Officer Young."

[illegible] sample of the ruffianly way these youngsters have learned to conduct themselves. The 78's hang out around Huntington street, Williams street and Harrison avenue. The [illegible] Langdon and George streets and Norfolk avenue. There is bitter rivalry between the two crowds and each [illegible] a young girl whose [illegible] lead.

This proposes to have a pitched fight on the prairie [illegible] is being carried on with all seriousness. The "prairie" is a famous battle field on Norfolk avenue, where there is plenty of room for the contestants to pound one another black and blue.

The idea is for each gang to have a color, which the members will display by ribbons tied to the arm. Thus no members of the same party will war upon each other.

The better element has tried in vain to prevent this rowdyism and strong protests are made daily against it.

Mrs. J. Stratch, who keeps a grocery store at the corner of Langdon and George streets says: "The way the boys and girls of this vicinity carry on is disgraceful. Girls and boys of tender age are out on the streets with this gang, which calls itself the 39, and their actions are those of young rowdies. You cannot imagine the way those children fight and yell like Indians unless you have seen them. They had a fight the other night, and in the last fight the little Italian girl would have had to go to the hospital unless the neighbors had stepped in and took her away from the hoodlums, both boys and girls, who were beating her."

TAKE COMMUNION BY KISSING A ROSE AT ALTAR RAIL.

Strange Church in France Has Priestesses Who Celebrate Aesthetic White Mass.

MANY AMERICAN MEMBERS

Special Cable to Boston American.

Paris, June 30.—Since the separation of church and state many strange sects of a more or less morbid character have achieved importance. The growth of none is more remarkable than that of the Gnostic Church, whose chief is Mgr Peithager.

"How many members have you?" he was asked by the American correspondent yesterday.

"Hundreds, my son, and thousands."

"Some of your bishops, it is understood, are men illustrious, under other names, in the world of art and even of politics."

"That is true," said Mgr. Peithager.

"And some of your bishops are women?"

"Certainly—many of them are women."

Then Monseigneur described the aim and purpose of this extraordinary church. He said:

"Our object is the salvation of souls in the first place and in the second place, the advocacy of bodily pleasures which are too much neglected by religious people. That is to say our religion is, above all, aesthetic and just as D'Annunzio, the Italian novelist, has proclaimed his love for physical beauty, we proclaim our creed—love for the beautiful, for the aesthetic."

"Is that quite moral?" it was asked.

"My son," said the chief of the Gnostics, "our morality is better than any other, for we worship God by loving His creatures."

"And your rites?"

"We have priestesses who celebrate the white mass. Our communion is made with roses—each communicant kisses a rose and passes it on to another communicant."

"And may anyone attend?"

"Only those who have been initiated."

There are many strange religions in America, perhaps that is why nearly one half of the members of the Gnostic church of France are—I am sure you have guessed it—Americans.

RICH WIDOW STILL PURSUED BY SWEDE

HE ALSO HAS TROUBLES

Special Cable to Boston American.

Paris, June 20.—Mrs. Perry R. Chance, who was the widow of the aged Chicago millionaire, James C. King, and whose affectionate adventures have been recently described in these cables, has applied to the police for protection from Frank Frogren, the Swede, who claims to have been betrothed to her. Her friend and adviser, George P. Penhale, the New York financier, has visited the United States Embassy and afterward placed himself in communication with a detective of the Surete, who took him to the chief of the secret police, M. Hamard. Mrs. Chance does not want her former admirer arrested or driven out of France, but she wishes to have him seriously warned by the chief of police to cease molesting her.

More Trouble for Mrs. Chance.

Mrs. Chance wants everything done quietly, because her new husband, the dentist Chance, knows nothing of the Swede's alleged claims on her. She and the dentist knew each other only four days before they were engaged and immediately wedded, and she fears that Mr. Chance, who is a large, stern man, will be angry if he learns of her previous wooing. M. Hamard has agreed to investigate the case and decide in a few days.

Mrs. Chance has already paid Frogren for his marriage clothes and the loss of his position, that of salesman for a Detroit machinery house, and has his receipt and full release, but he now claims $5,000 more for damage done to his self-respect.

Mrs. Chance does not believe it wise to pay this money, as the Swede might go on claiming more, even after having returned her letters.

Mr. Chance Also Has Troubles.

Meanwhile the new husband, Dr. Chance, is having troubles of his own owing to his sudden marriage. When he secured a license to wed Mrs. James C. King at Saint Martin's Church, London, he described her as the widow of the venerable Chicago millionaire, omitting to state that she had previously been married and divorced and that the previous husband is still living. Now he is troubled about the legality of this Church of England marriage with a divorced woman. Also Dr. Chance wishes to have a lump sum of $50,000 to secure a business partnership with his brother, Wade Chance, husband of Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger. The new Mrs. Chance, on the advice of her friends, refuses to give her husband anything except his regular allowance of $100 weekly.

AMERICAN TROOPS BATTLE WITH YAQUI

Four Mexican Indians Killed and Several Wounded in Engagement.

Mexico City, June 20.—American and Mexican troops are pursuing the Yaqui Indians and war is on in earnest.

In a battle which occurred at the town of Buena Vista, near Canton del Nordeste, in the State of Chihuahua, four Indians were killed and several wounded. The soldiers had one man wounded. The troops were aided in their fight by the townspeople of Buena Vista.

MRS. POTTER PALMER, WHO HAS FORCED HER WAY INTO MAYFAIR

LONDON SHIFTING ITS SOCIAL CENTRE

Gloomy Mayfair Is Being Abandoned to American and African Millionaires.

London, June 20.—Fashionable London is changing its habitat. Mayfair, which has so long been regarded as synonymous with all that is distinguished and select, is gradually but surely being abandoned by the English aristocracy.

In the words of one prophet of fashion the deathknell of Mayfair is sounding, and the region is being left to the American and African millionaires.

Abandoning the District.

"The" place now is Regent's Park. It really is a reversion of choice, for Regent's Park was the fashionable centre during George the Fourth's reign, and society is only going back to the place which it once delighted to honor. From Regent's Park the leaders of fashion moved to Bloomsbury, but Bloomsbury now is the abode of the boarding house keeper.

The abandonment of Mayfair is not astonishing, for the quarter consists of narrow streets and dingy prospects, relieved only by Park lane, which faces on Hyde Park. It is on Park lane that the "outside" rich have their splendid homes. The rest of Mayfair, however, is very dull.

Green street, for instance, is a dreary thoroughfare. It is at No. 61 Green street that Mrs. Potter Palmer has her London abode. This is the famous Hampden House, which the rich Chicago widow leases from the Duke of Abercorn.

Mrs. Palmer's Place.

It has been referred to as a "magnificent" and "beautiful" mansion. True, the interior is admirably adapted to functions of an extensive order, but on the outside it is plain and even forbidding, much like the old brick houses of lower New York.

As one evidence of the new shifting of centres it is to be noted that the two most important parties thus far given this season have been held in the Regent's Park section.

One was given by Mrs. Hall Walker in North Lodge, the other was Lady Londesborough's dinner and dance at St. Dunstan's Lodge, at which the King and Queen were present, also the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and what is generally referred to as "the elite of English society."

BLAMES GLADIATOR FOR ST. PAUL CRASH

Improper Manoeuvres on Part of British Cruiser Caused Collision, Rules Court.

London, June 20.—Sir John Gorell Barnes, president of the admiralty court, in giving a decision today in the case of the collision between the cruiser Gladiator and the American liner St. Paul, said he would render judgment merely as between ship and ship, apart from any individual action by those aboard the Gladiator. The court found that the St. Paul's speed was not excessive, that it was not true that her helm was starboarded, but that manoeuvres were substantially as pleaded by her owners, and that the Gladiator was distinctly to blame.

The court added that those witnesses who had asserted that the St. Paul gave a two-blast signal were mistaken. There was only one blast. There would have been no collision if the Gladiator's helm had not been improperly starboarded.

TREED ALL NIGHT BY THREE AFRICAN LIONS

London, June 20.—Some exciting lion stories have come by mail from a jungle township in Rhodesia, the finest big-game country in the world.

George Thomasine, a Livingston resident, was out duck-shooting on the Zambesia River when he was chased by three lions. Climbing a tree for safety, he was kept there all night by the lions, which never left the tree until, next morning, a search party found the treed man and drove off the lions.

No fewer than eight lions attacked the bivouac of a transport rider in Northwest Rhodesia. They killed two oxen and a horse, wounded five others and stampeded the remainder.

SAGAN AND ANNA TO WED IN 2 WEEKS

BRIDAL DAY KEPT SECRET

Ceremony According to Protestant Rite to Be Celebrated Quietly.

Paris, June 20.—The marriage banns of Mme. Anna Gould and Prince Helie de Sagan were published today.

The announcements were posted on the walls of the offices of the mayors of 16th and 17th arrondissements of Paris, in accordance with the law that requires the publication of a marriage [illegible] of each contracting party.

The document [illegible] the case of Mme. Gould is preceded by the marriage declaration of a seamstress and followed by that of a butcher, as follows:

"[illegible] publication of an intended marriage between [illegible] Helie de Boson de Talleyrand-Perigord, Prince de Sagan, [illegible] at 11 Rue [illegible] Frederic Boson de Talleyrand-Perigord, Duc de Sagan and [illegible] profession, and Anna [illegible] Gould [illegible] 126 Avenue Malakoff, [illegible] of Jay Gould and Helen Miller, divorced from Marie [illegible] Boniface, Count de Castellane, of which no knowledge [illegible] has been drawn up, is posted this day on the door of the mayor's office."

The document gives the age of Mme. Gould as [illegible] and Prince de Sagan as [illegible]. The exact place and date of the wedding have not yet been disclosed, but it will be celebrated within a fortnight and very quietly, only a few friends and relatives, including George Gould, being present. It will not be in France. The religious ceremony will be according to the Protestant rite. Prince Helie has not renounced his Catholic faith.

Count Boni de Castellane has not yet made any legal move. Mme. Gould's lawyers do not think he will act until after the marriage. They are confident his efforts to secure possession of his children will be futile.

PERSIANS ASK GERMANY'S AID

Turkish Troops Invading Country and Seizing Crown's Property.

patriotic societies at Teheran, Tabriz, Kasvin, and Ispahan have united in a demand for German protection against Turkey.

They ask that Germany send officers and officials to reorganize the Persian army and government. The Turkish invasion of Persia arises from a question of sovereignty over Armenian territory. In January of this year Turkey began concentrating reserves on the Persian frontier, and Turkish troops soon crossed the border. Apparently the Turks mean to remain permanently. Bodies of Turkish regulars have begun the collection of revenues, and a custom house has been established at Kehler, some miles inland from Urumiah.

The Turks have seized salt mines belonging to the Persian crown, and have expelled the shah's officials. There is every indication that the Turks are taking advantage of the disturbed conditions in Persia to seize a valuable strategic position.

HUGE TENTS DOOM FEVER MISQUITO

Havana, June 20.—A new device for checking the spread of yellow fever is being tested by the sanitary department. It consists of a tent large enough to enclose a whole block, and it is claimed for it that it will permit of such thorough simultaneous fumigation of the houses that not a fever infected mosquito has a chance to escape.

Two Spaniards in hospital at Daiquiri, Santiago Province, are reported to be suffering from yellow fever.

Provincial Governor Magoon has issued a decree forbidding shipmasters to enroll or land hands without permission of the Captain of the Port and the sanction of the consuls. The penalty for infringement is a fine of $25 for each man so enrolled or landed.

MILLIONAIRE AIDS IRELAND'S CAUSE

Robert Burke Returns to Tipperary With California Wealth.

Dublin, June 20.—John Redmond has at last secured the co-operation of a real live millionaire in the movement of which he is the head in Ireland. Robert J. Burke, a returned Californian, will soon enter Parliament as a member of one of the constituencies of Tipperary, where he has built a castle.

Burke, who was many times a millionaire before the San Francisco earthquake, has a million or two left and is spending it freely.

The former Californian has established a horse breeding farm and he hopes some day to be a rival of Richard Croker.

ASSEMBLY ASKS FREEDOM

Filipinos Believe Th[illegible] Able to Take Care of Themselves Without Any Aid

Manila, June 20.—The Philippine Assembly, on the eve of adjournment, [illegible] by a vote of [illegible] independence is the aspiration of the [illegible] people and that they [illegible] for immediate independence.

Governor-General Smith [illegible] said:

"I think it unwise to put [illegible] government of the United States [illegible] in regard to [illegible] It is purely a question of [illegible].

"[illegible] independence [illegible] other Power and [illegible] the people [illegible]. We have five thousand [illegible] and the people [illegible] of supporting them. [illegible] would be [illegible]. They would want more soldiers [illegible], more than their income [illegible] port.

"In the Moro country 5,000 American troops and ten companies of constabulary keep order. How could [illegible] the Philippines supply [illegible] numbers?

"The argument for [illegible] Some Power would be glad that the Filipinos [illegible] able to maintain independence from other Powers or even internally, except with dictatorship, which is unthinkable."

WOMEN WHO ENJOY RIGHT TO VOTE

Preparations Being Made in Germany to Fight for the Franchise.

Australia—Women have enjoyed the suffrage since September 19, 1893.

New Zealand—Of 140,000 women over age in New Zealand, 90,000 make use of their votes in the interest of morals, progress and against [illegible].

EBEN D. JORDAN AT LONDON HORSE SHOW

Other Americans at the Event, Including Clarence Moore and Alfred Vanderbilt.

London, June 20.—The horse show which opened with a blare of trumpets on Thursday has thus far proven a disappointment [illegible] dance. The Americans present [illegible] a mere handful, including Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Moore of Washington, who have been entertaining Alexander Legare and the Pitts Duffields, Mrs. Duffield being a daughter of Justice McKenna; Mrs. William Slater of Washington, [illegible] E. T. Stotesbury, the Philadelphia banker, who is enthusiastic over the show; Mrs. [illegible] Lippincott, Miss Hare, Eben D. Jordan of Boston and Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who had the curious experience on Friday of being unable to obtain a seat in his own box. One of his friends invited a party and when Mr. Vanderbilt arrived he found the box occupied by people he did not know.

He then sought a seat in Clarence Moore's box, saying, "Thank goodness, I don't have to talk to people whom I don't know and who probably wouldn't interest me."

R. P. McGrann and W. P. Butterfield of Plainfield, N. J., are, save for Walter Winans, the only American exhibitors. Mr. McGrann explains the absence of American horsemen this year as not due to any dissatisfaction last year, but to the fact that "affairs are so unsettled in the United States taht a number of exhibitors who would have loved to show here have been afraid to leave America, fearing something would break."

Dijon, France, June 20.—An engineer named Ponteaux announces the invention of an electric gun which, without powder or other explosive, is capable of firing 1,200 shots a minute.

WAITERS AGAINST TIPS.

Berlin, June 20.—The German Waiters' Congress has passed a resolution declaring "tips the most nefarious wage that could be offered to a self-respecting person." The congress has petitioned the Reichstag to make it unlawful for anyone to employ men or women without paying them stipulated wages.

INSURGENT SULTAN BADLY DEFEATED

Mulai Hafid's Trops Routed in Morocco City; Proclamation Halted.

Casablanca, Morocco, June 21.—The Shereefian tribesmen are reported to have defeated the followers of Mulai Hafid, the insurgent Sultan, in a series of engagements at Morocco City.

A [illegible] attempt made at Tangier to proclaim Mulai Hafid Sultan of Morocco was frustrated at the last moment. The form of proclamation was to be [illegible] and to consist of the substitution of the name of the new sultan for that of the old in the ceremonial prayer for the ruler at the Friday service in the mosque. This plan had been arranged by leading constituents of Mulai Hafid, but Mohammed L. Torres, the ex-foreign minister, was apprised of the plot, had the chief movers arrested and surrounded the mosque with troops.

Dover, Eng., June 20.—The annual yacht race from Dover to Heligoland for the cup offered by Emperor William of Germany was started auspiciously. There were only seven entries, two British yachts, Cicely and Ceylon, and five Germans, Comet, Hamburg, Clara, Susanne and Armgard. Cicely and Susanne were the first to cross the line. The wind was light from the east.

KAISER WANTS TO SEE KING EDWARD

THE LATTER SENDS HINT

London, June 20.—The strained relations between England and Germany over King Edward's [illegible] the Czar have been further [illegible] Edward's failure to visit the Kaiser [illegible] this year. [illegible] the upper ranks [illegible] deal of anxiety is expressed.

[illegible] received a letter from Kaiser William [illegible] him to come to Berlin [illegible] with his promise made [illegible] the Kaiser was in this country. [illegible] not to be a mere private [illegible] to the German capital [illegible] state.

[illegible] arrangements have [illegible] a few weeks [illegible] informed the Kaiser that he [illegible] his visit until next Spring [illegible] resented.

It is stated in court circles that unless [illegible] King goes to Berlin this Autumn the [illegible] will [illegible] may never come to [illegible] and that the [illegible] between the two monarchs [illegible] will be renewed. That is why the court is so anxious that the King and the Queen should visit Berlin for a few days [illegible].

JEAN DE RESZKE QUITS PARIS OPERA

Paris, June 20.—Jean de Reszke, after being snubbed for six months, has left the Paris Opera House in disgust.

It had long been his ambition to be connected with the opera in some authoritative way. When the new managers, Messrs. Messager and Broussan, took charge, they asked the tenor to collaborate with them. He was to guide and direct the singers and, as well, to have full control of the young debutantes who come up every year from the National Conservatory of Music and join the forces of the opera.

From the very start there was jealousy and discontent. For a number of months Jean de Reszke had the title of singing director, and that was all. He was given no authority, and his advice was coolly disregarded. At last, discouraged and disgusted, he sent in his resignation, and it was promptly accepted.

COREYS BREAK INTO CITADEL OF TITLED SOCIETY.

MET BY CHANCE AT GOLF

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, June 2[illegible].—William Ellis Corey and his beautiful wife, who was formerly Mabelle Gilman, have forced the doors of aristocratic society and dined with princes and royal dukes. Mr. Corey is prouder of this victory than of any of his triumphs in finance, divorce or matrimony, though it is less his victory than that of his brilliant wife.

It began at the golf links at La Boulie near Versailles, where Mrs. Corey was casually introduced to Grand Duke Cyril of Russia. This seemed a slight thing at the time, but has led on to a social conquest of which the Coreys dared not dream a few months ago.

Wins Duke With Smile

Indeed, instead of a long, slow siege with great expenditure of money, humility, and patience, which they thought would be necessary, Mrs. Corey's dashing campaign has resulted in the sudden surrender of the social fortress before a shot was fired.

Mrs. Corey merely [illegible] handkerchief, and [illegible] the person of the Grand Duke Cyril and [illegible] grand duchess [illegible].

The official introduction of the Coreys [illegible] this week at a dinner given by [illegible] and Madame De Reszke in their house in the Rue de la Faisanderie in honor of the Grand Duke Cyril.

There were thirteen [illegible] at the table, including the hosts. Others present were [illegible] Arthur Meyer and Madame Meyer, who is an authentic princess [illegible] de Morny, whose sister danced [illegible] the Moulin Rouge with great success, and the Duchesse de Morny, Prince Louis Murat, his [illegible], the Duke of Leuchtenberg.

Toasts Her as Beauty.

It was Grand Duke Cyril who had the honor of taking Mrs. Corey into dinner. Mr. Corey [illegible] placed next to Madame Arthur Meyer [illegible] was very happy over his wife's [illegible].

His [illegible] for his debut [illegible] which less aristocratic guests were invited.

Later in the week Mrs. Corey was toasted with great [illegible] and [illegible] wine glass as the prettiest woman in Paris.

[illegible] scene took place in a fashionable restaurant where the Grand Duke Cyril drank her health in champagne and then broke the glass on the edge of the table. On this occasion, of course, the Coreys were not present.

HEIR TO BARONY IS SOUGHT HERE

MISSING FOR TWO YEARS

Special Cable to Boston American.

London, June 20.—Somewhere in the United States working for a living is the much wanted heir of one of the oldest and richest baronies in England. Lord Petre, the fourteenth baron of his line, died last Tuesday at ancient Thorndon Hall in Essex, the country seat of the family for centuries.

Baron Petre left a daughter of eight, but no son. His title and estates, therefore, are inherited by his lordship's brother, the Honorable Philip Petre, who married the daughter of the late Mrs. Cavendish Taylor, who was once a famous American hostess in London.

Absent Two Years.

The family lawyers have begun a search for the heir, who is thought to be in the United States earning a living in some humble capacity. There is a question whether the heir will claim the title. His distressed wife, who has a young daughter, has not heard from her husband in two years.

Several years ago the honorable Philip, who has unexpectedly come into the title and estates, got into difficulties by passing a check for which there was no funds in the bank, and the results were serious. The honorable Philip after paying the penalty of his error disappeared from the sight of his wife and noble brother.

In Trouble Over Check.

He shunned society and declined to accept assistance from his family, preferring to wander London, penniless, without lodging, and often sleeping on benches in the embankment gardens. He finally disappeared altogether. His family suspected that he went to America to begin life anew. The family lawyers do not know that he is alive, but the official announcement has been made that he is now Lord Petre, succeeding to the title and its rich estates.

His elder brother and Philip's friends have always asserted that his punishment was unmerited and harsh and that when he drew the check he was unaware there was no money in the bank to meet it. The Petres are one of the oldest families in England.

AMBASSADOR HILL BECOMES HIS OWN PRESS AGENT.

ARRIVED LIKE A TOURIST

Carrying a Suit Case and Grip Went to His Hotel Unannounced.

By Malcolm Clark.

Berlin, June 20.—That Dr. David Jayne Hill, the United States' new Ambassador to Germany, is a diplomat who understands the way to make himself popular, he proved the very moment he unexpectedly arrived in Berlin.

When the Kaiser blundered in his disappointment at not seeing Cornelius Vanderbilt made Ambassador, and objected to Dr. Hill because he had no fortune, the German press took up the cudgels in defence of Dr. Hill, and said that what the German people wanted was a diplomat who understood his business and was a true representative of the great republic, and not a heavily gilt ass to feed and amuse the idlers of court society. It was pointed out that a republic should be represented by plain, simple democratic men, like Benjamin Franklin of old, and Dr. Hill saw the way the wind blew and acted accordingly.

In the most unpretentious way he arrived in Berlin a week ago. He had not even telegraphed ahead to secure rooms, and no one was at the station to meet him. Carrying his suitcase and grip like any ordinary tourist, he went to the waiting room, called a cab and drove to the Adlon Hotel, where he was given the rooms recently occupied by the French Ambassador, Jules Cambon, and his presence here was known only when he signed the hotel register.

Dr. Hill has acted as his own press agent and he has played his cards well, for, even though the Kaiser and his court may miss the glitter and party [illegible] hospitality of the departed Ambassador, they will be mighty careful not to show it, and by his democratic first appearance in Berlin the Minister has made himself solid with the radical press and the masses of the people.

If he is as skilful a diplomat as he is a stage manager and press agent, Dr. Hill will be a most successful representative of the United States here.

The Kaiser did not attempt to hide how pleased he was to receive the telegram from Duke Ernest August of Cumberland announcing the entrance of his son into the Bavarian army, for this telegram meant much more than the words themselves conveyed. It meant that the long strife between the Hohenzollerns and the Guelphs is nearing its end, with a complete victory for the Kaiser.

By allowing his son to enter the German army, whose chief the Kaiser is, the Duke of Cumberland practically lays down his sword, buries his tomahawk and announces that he is ready to smoke the pipe of peace.

In return for this the Duke will receive a very large amount of money which formerly belonged to his family, but which was seized by Prussia and held until a descendant of the last King of Hanover should recognize the Kaiser and relinquish his claim upon the throne of Hanover.

Worry and anxiety at the political situation both in the empire and in its relations to foreign powers have played havoc with the Kaiser's health, and he is now as nervous as he was before starting for the Mediterranean, where he almost recovered, and his physicians have insisted that he spend as little time as possible in Berlin and Potsdam.

As a result of this the Kaiser will spend more time abroad than he has done for years. The Norwegian cruise will be extended, and will possibly be followed by a visit to Russia. Returning, the Kaiser will spend a few weeks in Baden, [illegible] a week or two hunting, but will [illegible] for England, where he has [illegible] Highcliffe Castle, Colonel Stuart Wortley's mansion, near Bournemouth, where he stayed last year [illegible] his health. The slight accident to the Kaiserin some ten days ago seems to have had much more serious effects on Emperor William than on the Empress, for, while she recovered from the shock almost immediately, the Kaiser was completely upset, and for [illegible] days he was so nervous that even his [illegible] daughter, Princess Victoria, hesitated to go near him.

WINS TRIUMPH OVER JEALOUS WOMAN IN PARISIAN SOCIETY

MRS RUTHERFORD STUYVESANT.

Mrs. Rutherford Stuyvesant.

MRS. R. STUYVESANT WINS NEW VICTORY

Paris, June 20.—Mrs. Rutherford Stuyvesant as the Beauty of the Season has discovered that the distinction has its tribulations. Naturally, Mrs. Stuyvesant's eminence has aroused the jealousy of other women, and these jealous beauties have almost managed to take their revenge on the perfectly innocent husband of the fair Franco-American.

Rutherford Stuyvesant was up for election to the ultra-aristocratic Union Club of Paris. No one could have been more eligible, but a swarm of angry French women jealous of his wife determined to persuade their husbands and brothers to blackball him. For a time it looked as though they would succeed, but they counted without Mrs. Stuyvesant.

At a great reception she laughingly disclosed the plot to some of the leading members of the club. And the result? Mr. Stuyvesant, who is the brother-in-law of Ambassador White, was elected with absolute unanimity.

SWEDISH KING IS AWAITING PLATTER

Stockholm, June 20.—King Gustav Adolphus is still waiting for the gold platter, on which the traditional salt and bread were offered to him upon his arrival in Russia recently.

Such platters, very large of pattern and of great intrinsic value, become the property of the person honored, and in the Moskow Kremlin there is a hall two hundred feet long by thirty high, the walls and ceilings of which are covered with bread and salt platters, gifts to the Czars.

Just before the platter was offered to King Adolphus, the Czar's Court Marshal noticed with dismay that the united Arms of Sweden and Norway, in precious stones, decorated the centre. To spare the King a reminder of his loss, the Marshal put an extra quantity of salt and bread on the [illegible]. In this way the telltale arms were hidden.

However, when Adolphus asked for his platter he had to be told that something [illegible] that the emblem of homage would be sent after him when repaired. The King is still waiting and the newspapers suggest that this little matter might be forgotten unless a reminder be sent to Russia.

MISS REID TO WEAR SHEATH GOWNS DIRECT FROM PARIS

BY THE COUNTESS CARLO DI CAPRI

Special Fashion Correspondent of the Boston American.

Paris, June 20.—Notwithstanding opposition and ridicule, the Directoire dress, modified and with a thousand little details, is seen at all smart functions. Many American women at present in Europe have tried this style and have found it so charming and becoming that they have ordered not one, but several of these dresses.

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, who was in Paris for a few days, gave an order at Worth's for two such frocks for her daughter, who is tall and graceful and slender. One is in a delightful shade of golden khaki meteore. The skirt is cut long, but not too long. The bust and waist are draped in tiny folds, and the white tucked guimpe is outlined with a rich antique embroidery. The flat tucked sleeves are very long, and a lace frill falls over the hands.

graceful and slender. One is in a delightful shade of golden khaki meteore. The skirt is cut long, but not too long. The bust and waist are draped in tiny folds, and the white tucked guimpe is outlined with a rich antique embroidery. The flat tucked sleeves are very long, and a lace frill falls over the hands.

The other is in white liberty and is also draped. The underskirt is quite plain, but over this is a tunic in warm silk tulle bordered with a narrow edge of taffeta. The top of the corsage is semi-Greek in style and is composed of a white chemisette of lingerie interspaced with Valenciennes insertion, while over this is arranged coarse silk tulle and taffetas in graceful folds. In this dress the sleeves are elbow length.

For the Grand Prix some wonderful novelties were turned out by the houses in the Rue de la Paix. Paris still clings to the sheath dress, and the corselets are lighter, and more clinging than ever. In order that this can be effective they have had to invent new materials which are almost elastic.

In addition to the Directoire, we have the Tanagra style. This consists of a skirt opened up at the side above the knee over a plisse of mousseline de soie of the same shade, and has a short serpentine train at the back. With this style of dress a new manner of walking has become necessary which reminds one of the gliding of a serpent.

Yet with this ultra tightness we are wearing immense ruffles and ruches of tulle and lace round the neck. With these ruffles round the neck, huge ruches of tulle are placed around the hat as trimming. In all cases the hat and the ruche must harmonise in color.

The newest hats have a tendency to become large and flat. They are trimmed with immense ruches of ostrich plumes, with four or five huge ostrich feathers bunched at the side. The brims are not turned up at the sides at all, but just allowed to drop as they will. With the very popular wheat color a ruche of the same shade is used and then the hat has long black velvet strings to tie under the chin.

So great has become the taste for elegance that even the simplest country costumes must hang perfectly and be of irreproachable cut. The Parisienne has taken a hint from America and adopted the short skirt for the country, but the French short skirt is very short indeed and does not by any means cover the ankle.

CRUEL YAQUI WAR TO END AFTER CENTURY

The Fighting Indian Nation to Dissolve and Become Mexican.

Hermosillo, Sonora, Mex., June 20.—After a war which has continued intermittently for more than 120 years, the Yaqui nation is about to be dissolved, to sever tribal relations, and its members are to settle down into law-abiding Mexican citizens. Originally numbering 20,000 or more, they have never yet acknowledged the authority of the Mexican Government, but the end is fast coming. On Monday they will assemble to approve the agreement with the Government whereby they will become Mexican citizens.

Although Christianized by the Spanish fathers, the Yaquis refused to accept the dominion of Spain, and in the revolution materially aided in driving the Spaniards from the country, and in later years, against the armies of the republic, they stubbornly maintained their freedom.

The sovereignty of the "Yaqui country" they conceded to no one. If beaten by the armies in the field, they retreated to the mountains and waged guerilla warfare. Quarter was neither asked nor given. Thousands have been killed on both sides, and property has been damaged to the extent of at least $50,000,000.

Prior to the accession of Porfirio Diaz to the presidency of the republic, the rights of the Yaquis to levy tribute on the commerce of the Yaqui River was recognized by the Government of Mexico, and but for the inrush of Americans it is probable that such condition of things could have existed unchallenged to-day.

In minerals, in agriculture, in home making, the Yaqui country is probably surpassed by no spot in the great Southwest.

AUSTRIAN HEIR IS A SLAVE TO WORK

Budapest, June 20.—Bishop Lanyi publishes a new character study of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Crown of Austria Hungary. Pride and diligence, love of art and of family tolerance in religious matters are named as his chief characteristics. The Bishop says:

"The Archduke is such a slave to work that he carries the State papers and documents on which he happens to be at work, even to the chase, with him. When after game the Archduke has a huntsman keep watch, while another stands behind him with a loaded rifle. And not until the weapon is handed to him with some whispered directions, does he drop his papers or book.

"He is almost as fond of music as of the chase. During a recent hunting visit to Upper Hungary he ran across a roving gypsy band of musicians. He engaged them on the spot, and they fiddled so loud and incessantly that they drove all the game away."

Princess Sophie, the Archduke's consort, is not only a loving mother and amiable wife, according to her husband's biographer, but a woman of much original thought. She talks fluently on any subject save politics. Princess Sophie and her children have mastered the difficult Hungarian tongue, but the Archduke, though an ardent student of the vernacular and spending much time in Hungary, is afraid to speak it in public.

Richard Croker and Family Appear to Be Hopelessly Parted

Put Up at Hotels Only Quarter of a Mile Apart, but There Is No Reunion.

London, June 20.—Richard Croker has been staying at the Metropole, while Mrs. Croker and her daughter are at the Carlton, a quarter of a mile away, but there has been no reconciliation, nor is there likely to be.

Rhodora's nerve was affected by her fall in the Oaks. When she was brought out for the race at Ascot, in which the odds were 6 to 4 on her winning, she at first declined to leave the paddock, and when she was finally got to the starting point she showed no pace and came in last.

Mr. Croker makes no complaint, but these disappointments are the bitterest a keen racing man could encounter.

Mrs. and Miss Croker are going over to the Continent in about a week.

JAPANESE URGE FOREIGN TRADE

Tokio, June 20.—Baron Ishii, in his first speech in his new capacity as Vice-Foreign Minister, addressing a joint meeting of the chambers of commerce now in session in Tokio, gave a hint of his attitude toward foreigners trading with Japan when he warned the chambers to avoid antagonizing foreign trade.

He said that fear was already expressed among foreign merchants that a revision would result in the creation of prohibitive tariffs against foreign manufactures.

Continuing, Baron Ishii said that the world should be made to understand that Japan welcomed foreign trade and would encourage it by every fair means. He invited the co-operation of the chambers and hoped they would offer suggestion regarding the revision of the tariff.

A special dispatch to the Asahi from San Francisco says that the republicans have determined to incorporate in their platform a clause demanding the exclusion of the Japanese. The Asahi, in an editorial, says it is hard to believe that Americans would agree to such an unjust clause, which, it says warningly, would mar the excellent feeling now prevailing, the result of the splendid impression made by the American Ambassador, coupled with the recent friendliness evidenced by the princely appropriation for the Japanese Exposition.

A dispatch from Seoul of this date says that a new court of cassation on appeal from the local courts of Corea will open July 1.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA TO GIVE A CIRCUS

London, June 20.—Queen Alexandra's children's party at Buckingham Palace last year was such an immense success that she has decided to give another this year, and already circus proprietors, entertainers, jugglers, animal trainers and such like are pestering the court officials with offers to provide side shows.

The date has not yet been definitely fixed, but the party will be given during the first week in July. It is on these occasions only that Princess Victoria, the Queen's daughter, overcomes her shyness and completely "lets herself go."

At last year's children's party Princess Victoria was discovered in a remote shrubbery in the palace grounds lying on the ground and being severely pummelled with cushions by six very small children who had not the slightest suspicion of her exalted rank.

There is always great jealousy among aristocratic parents concerning the children's parties, and the invitation list is being anxiously awaited. About four hundred children will be invited, many of them the offspring of the Queen's personal friends. The rest of them are discreetly chosen by the Lord Chamberlain from his list of those who have attended State balls and royal garden parties during the past few years.

Survives Execution Only to Be Sent to Prison for Escaping

St. Petersburg, June 20.—Riddled with bullets from a firing party at his "execution," but surviving what should have been his death, Ivan Lust has been doomed to two years' imprisonment, presumably for being alive.

Lust was sentenced to death for taking part in the Baltic province revolt in 1905, and was sentenced to be shot. When the twelve bullets had entered his body he was left where he fell. The wounds were not fatal, and Lust crawled away after the soldiers had been withdrawn, and found refuge in a hut where an old woman nursed him back to health.

When he was able to leave the hut Lust was immediately arrested. He was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, but he [illegible] appeal to the Emperor for a pardon. But the hard-hearted authorities would not allow his petition to reach the Czar and his sentence was confirmed. Lust, extremely weak and in a state of nervous exhaustion, has thus to serve his two years' sentence for not being killed.

M'MAHON'S FAMOUS PHRASE ANOTHER'S

"I'm Here and I Stay" Was Penned by the Wife of Marquis de Castellane.

Paris, June 20.—M. le Marquis de Castellane is publishing his "memoirs" in a weekly magazine of Paris.

A great deal of criticism has arisen as to his version of the singular origin of the famous words "J'y suis, j'y reste"—"I'm here and I stay" heretofore attributed to the famous Marechal MacMahon at Malakoff. The Marquis says:

"It was during the course of a discussion in Parliament on the subject of the prolongation of MacMahon's power that I decided to support him. I had prepared a discourse which I wanted to end with a good strong theatrical climax. The speech was all right, but the climax, alas, was long in coming.

"'Now this is all very fine,' I said to my wife, 'but I've got to find something to accentuate my argument and bring my speech to a dramatic finish—but what?' We began to review MacMahon's life. 'Suppose we end it like this,' she said. 'Do for France to-day what MacMahon did sixteen years ago for the army.' It was at Malakoff. He was the first to enter the citadel. They were about to be blown up, but that did not matter. He seized the telegraphic apparatus and ticked out these sublime words to his chief: 'J'y suis, j'y reste.' (I am here. I stay.) I quickly penned the words.

"The effect was indescribable. By evening every paper in Paris was proclaiming them, 'J'y suis, j'y reste.' Only they were the words of the Marquise de Castellane and not of the hero MacMahon."

WRITER COUNTESS TO QUIT GERMANY

London, June 20.—The many American admirers of the work of the Countess Von Arnim, the authoress who wrote "Elizabeth and Her German Garden" and other delightful books, and who so long remained mysteriously anonymous, will probably be sorry to hear that she has shaken the dust of Germany from her feet and has determined to live the rest of her life in England.

Her husband, "The Man of Wrath" as she called him, is quite resigned to the change and has just sold the estate on the shores of the Baltic Sea which inspired his wife's books. The Countess, who is thoroughly English, being the daughter of the late J. Beauchamp, at one time a well-known literary man, wants her six children to be brought up in English fashion, and she has taken a beautiful place in Devonshire.

The new book which the Countess will shortly publish deals with life in a caravan, and is the result of a tour she made in a real gypsy caravan through the southern counties of England last Summer.

Caravanizing, by the way, will be more popular than ever this Summer with society women who want the thorough rest and change which automobiles fail to give them.

King Leopold Proxy Witness Against His Daughter, Louise

Princess Sued by Jewelers for Bill of $7,000; Admits Debts Amounting to 1,200,000 Francs.

Vienna, June 20.—In the case of Joseph Reiners, jewelers, vs. Princess Louise of Belgium, the divorced wife of Prince Philip of Coburg, King Leopold testified by proxy against his daughter. It appears that the Princess promised to pay a jewelry bill of some $7,000 "as soon as she acquired a fortune by donation or inheritance."

The King's proxy testified that Louise inherited 700,000 francs from her mother, and consequently she was well able to pay the bill.

The Princess denied her father's testimony, stating that she received less than 400,000 francs from her mother, and that claims amounting to 1,200,000 francs stood recorded against the inheritance.

COQUELIN A ROOSTER IN ROSTAND'S PLAY

ALL THE ACTORS ANIMALS

Special Cable to Boston American.

Paris, June 20.—The final arrangements for the production of Edmond Rostand's animal play, "Chanticleer," have been made at last. It will be brought out at the Porte Saint Martin Theatre early in September by Coquelin.

Rostand may have got his first idea from "The Birds" of Aristophanes, but the play is eminently original. It has to do with the love story, which ends tragically, of a vainglorious chanticleer, or familiar barnyard rooster. This role will be played by the elder Coquelin. His son, Jean Coquelin, will take the part of the farm dog. The comedian, Galipaux, will appear as a blackbird. Mademoiselle Marthe Merlot will be a nightingale, and Madame Augustine Leriche a guinea hen. And there are sixty other animal roles in the play.

Landolff is already at work on the various costumes of hide and feathers. The scenery for the first act is already under way. The curtain rises on a woodland scene; the trees are filled with human birds, and in the most realistic way they sit on the branches and chatter and gossip.

Monsieur Rostand has spent the week at the Elysee Palace Hotel. He is in bad health and refused to see visitors. He is extremely nervous about "Chanticleer," and has withdrawn it from the hands of the actors time and again, but at last it is certain to go on. It is understood that Charles Frohman has secured the rights for all English-speaking countries.

TEARS, LIKE ETHER, BENUMB THE BRAIN

Paris, June 20.—In La Revue Professor Waynbaum, M. D., publishes some queer facts regarding the nature and purpose of tears, coming to the astonishing conclusion that tears act upon the human organism "like chloroform, ether or alcohol."

"When a human being gives way to sorrow," says Dr. Waynbaum, "the blood pressure in the brain decreases. The tear helps in this process which benumbs the brain, for the time being, causing passiveness of the soul almost approaching indifference.

"Tears are blood, changing color by their passage through the lachrymal glands. One can drown his sorrow in tears as one can benumb his senses by the uses of alcohol or drugs. When a person cries the facial muscles contract and the appearance of the face changes, which action facilitates the white blood letting driving the blood particles into the lachrymal gland, from which they issue in the shape of tears.

"Children, whose nervous system is particularly tender, derive great benefit from crying occasionally. The act of crying relieves their brain. The same may be said with respect to women."

The professor likewise explains why laughter sometimes produces tears, but the explanation is too technical for reproduction.

TOLSTOI FINISHES "AFTER THE BALL"

St. Petersburg, June 20.—Tolstoi has finished "his last novel," according to A. F. Koni, the Russian author, who recently visited the great novelist.

"It is a story dealing with the renaissance of love," said Tolstoi, "and it will not be publishtd during my lifetime. I call it 'After the Ball.' At a fashionable dance a young student meets the beautiful daughter of a high military officer. Both fall instantly in love with each other. Next day the student sees the father at a military execution and observes that he acts the brute. The student indignantly turns from his loved one and will have nothing whatever to do with the brute's daughter.

"But in the end," concluded Tolstoi, "his love triumphs over his indignation, over his patriotism, over his love for humanity and Russia—and here we have the Renaissance of Love."

COMPOSED MARCH FOR REID BRIDAL

Special Cable to Boston American.

Paris, June 20.—Sebastian B. Schlesinger, the American composer, who has made his home for a number of years in Paris, was asked by Whitelaw Reid to compose a wedding march in honor of his daughter's marriage.

The march is just finished and Schlesinger played it last night to a few friendly critics, who gathered in his studio. He started for London to-day, having been invited to attend the wedding as a guest. During the ceremony his march will be played. He has given it the name of the "Anglo-American Wedding March."

SAYS ENGLAND IS NAGGING KAISER TO FIGHT.

SEES A GENERAL CONFLICT

By the Marquis de Castellane.

Paris, June 20.—I have had a curious interview with General Gallifet, our former minister of war, in reference to the persistent rumors of war in Europe.

"What do you think of them?" I asked.

"I think they are perfectly justified," he replied.

"In what way?"

"Why, by reason of the incessant nagging provocations which Edward VII addresses to his German nephew. The Kaiser must have a very thick skin if he does not, sooner or later, resent these nasty pin-pricks. England wants a war in order to put a stop to German growth the world over."

"I have given the last three years to the study of maritime questions, and I am firmly convinced that within five years England will have lost her mastery of the seas and will have found, if not a superior, at all events an equal, in Germany or the United States. Therefore, I conclude that it will not be long before war is forced upon Europe, since England cannot wait until her commercial rivals have taken command of the sea."

"And what will happen to France, General, in this coming struggle?" I asked.

"I shall see war break out without enthusiasm, but without fear. Our young army runs rapidly young in the ways of war [illegible] have been marvellously trained and disciplined. And our artillery is of the best. We lack only one thing. Our officers have no experience, and perhaps they are not as self-confident as they might be. But that will come very quickly. And this self-confidence, for the French army as well as for the German, will hang upon the result of the first battles."

HOW I TOOK MY WRINKLES OUT

After Massage, Creams and Beauty Doctors Had Failed.

BY HARRIETT META.

Trouble, worry and ill health brought me deep lines and wrinkles. I realized that they not only greatly marred my appearance and made me look much older, but that they would greatly interfere with my success, because a woman's success, either socially or financially, depends very largely on her appearance. The homely woman, with deep lines and furrows in her face, must fight an unequal battle with her younger and better looking sister.

I, therefore, bought various brands of cold cream and skin foods and massaged my face with most constant regularity, hoping to regain my former appearance. But the wrinkles simply would not go. On the contrary, they seemed to get deeper. Next I went to a beauty specialist, who told me she could easily rid me of my wrinkles. I paid my money and took the treatment. Sometimes I thought they got less, but after spending all the money I could afford for such treatment, I found I still had my wrinkles. So I gave up in despair and concluded I must carry them to my grave. One day a friend of mine who was versed in chemistry made a suggestion, and this gave me a new idea. I immediately went to work making experiments and studying everything I could get hold of on this subject. After several long months of almost numberless trials and discouragements I finally discovered a process which produced most astounding results on my wrinkles in a single night. I was delighted beyond expression. I tried my treatment again, and, lo and behold, my wrinkles were practically gone. A third treatment—three nights in all—and I had no wrinkles and my face was as smooth as ever. I next offered my treatment to some of my immediate friends, who used it with surprising results, and I have now decided to offer it to the public. Miss Gladys Desmond of Pittsburg, Pa., writes that it made her wrinkles disappear in one night. Mrs. M. W. Graves of Bridgeport, Conn., states: "There is not a wrinkle left, my friends say I look twenty years younger. I consider your treatment a Godsend to womankind." Mrs. James Barss of Central City, S. D., writes: "The change is so great that it seems more a work of magic." I will send further particulars to anyone who is interested, absolutely free of charge. I use no cream, facial massage, face steamings or so-called skin foods; there is nothing to injure the skin. It is an entirely new discovery of my own and so simple that you can use it without the knowledge of your most intimate friends. You apply the treatment at night, and go to bed. In the morning, lo! the wonderful transformation. People often write to me, "It sounds too good to be true." Well, the test will tell. If interested in my discovery, please address Harriett Meta, Suite 744D, Syracuse, N. Y., and I will send you full particulars.

CENTERPIECE FREE

A beautiful 12-inch Eyelet Centerpiece, stamped on finest linene, will be given absolutely free to all who will send us a club of only two trial subscriptions at ten cents each to the great new monthly periodical, AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE. This new monthly is backed by the unlimited resources of a colossal organization—comprising, as it does, three of the greatest monthly magazines of their kind in the world and, in addition, eight great metropolitan dailies scattered clear over the breadth of the country from one coast to the other. It is now the management's intention to make the new monthly AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE the greatest periodical of its kind published. Therefore, there will appear in this new magazine the great $75,000 Editorials, which in the past have secured such a world-wide reputation, in addition to monthly contributions by such world-famous writers as ELLA WHEELER WILCOX, the greatest authoress, GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, the world's best known living playwright, MRS. GENERAL JOHN A. LOGAN, of national reputation; CLARA MORRIS, America's best known actress-writer, DOROTHY DIX, one of the cleverest women writers of this great organization, etc., etc. The ART side of the magazine will be represented by that great galaxy of wonderful artists which has always been a part of this organization, namely, OPPER, the best known cartoonist of his time, OUTCAULT, the originator of the famous "Buster Brown" cartoons; POWERS, the funniest, most comical picture artist drawing to-day, and MAGER, DIRKS, BUNNY, etc., etc., etc. But the above are only a FEW of the dozens upon dozens of world-famous editors and artists who have been called to make the AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE the greatest periodical published at a popular price. Now, as a mere introduction to the magazine itself, if you will send us a club of two one-year trial subscriptions at 10 cents each we will mail you the above beautiful 12-inch Centerpiece, FREE of charge, provided you answer this advertisement at once—to-day—addressing: AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE, Dept. 128, 60 Rose St., New York.

WANTED—Young men for all kinds of work on board the vessels comprising the big fleets of the United States Navy, do you want to see some of the world and at the same time save more money than most men do working at home?

Do you want a liberal employer, who encourages recreation and study, who gives you a chance to fit yourself for a better position and advances you as soon as you are competent?

Your pay begins when you enter the service—board, lodging, medical attendance if sick and a sixty-dollar uniform outfit, all are free. A trade means better pay to begin and quicker promotion. Musicians have the same advantage.

If accepted, you get a steady job, a chance to become manly and self-controlled. You will be sent to sea, probably on board one of the big new war vessels.

Ask anyone in the Navy, or send for free book, illustrated in colors, which tells in detail all about the life in the Navy—the useful things you learn; also about the cruises, the drills, the sports. This book tells about the number of working hours and the regular half-days off. It also tells what you want to know about the wages paid, the promotions given, etc.

Send postal for it to the BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, Navy Department, Washington. Or get all the books about the navy at the Navy Recruiting Station, 66 Hanover st., Boston, Mass.

THERE'S NO EXCUSE!

FOR ANY WOMAN to be without a lovely, full, plump, entrancing bust. For 20 years we have proven how easily, cheaply and quickly it may be done. The cheap humbugs and "make would-be imitators" of our treatment "prove beyond doubt" the wonderful value of Dr. Conway's Bustoids in restoring, enlarging and developing the busts of old and young without injury or failure. These slick gentry, as your good sense tells you, "only pick out to imitate" things with real merit and of greatest value, hence you've been swindled by "their little prices" and would-be imitators. Why not come to the fountain head, where you can see, talk with and deal, if you want to, with the originators of the only scientific treatment which enlarges the bust in a sensible, natural manner! We either do this work for you by written, legal contract, enlarging your bust 4 to 12 inches or more, as desired, or we forfeit $1,000; or we sell you the treatment and you do it "quietly" at home. The thin, scrawny, flat chested, with no hips and no bosom, who will be given "the cold shoulder" this vacation, can be made full, plump, pretty, happy, contented and "the girls" in a reasonable time, by Dr. Conway's Bustoids. There's no substitute for them. CALL FOR FREE FULL PARTICULARS. Sealed facts 4c. stamps. CONWAY SPECIFIC CO., 178 Tremont Street, Boston.

OUR DOUBLE STRENGTH

BUST TREATMENT never fails to develop 4 to 8 inches or more, and makes soft, flabby, shrunken or unshapely breasts plump, fine, shapely and elegant; seven years without a failure, when used faithfully proves it; only safe, sure, perfect and permanent method in the world. "Every case absolutely guaranteed" if used faithfully. Sealed particulars, G. L. CUSHMAN CO., Haverhill, Mass.

Only "The Easy Marks" Pay Pride Prices on Pianos

But you must expect to pay for material, work of construction, legitimate expenses covering rents, salesmen's salaries—all these things you must pay for in all lines—not pianos alone. In buying a piano you must avoid paying Pride Prices like the Easy Marks—that is, buying a piano on name alone. We admit that the names of makers of high-class pianos are good guarantees of value and quality, and furthermore we admit that the maker of a fine piano is entitled to a good price for his genius—musical, artistic, etc.; but in these days of fierce competition you don't have to pay too big a price for even these qualities. We go into the cold, cruel, competitive market and buy at sacrifice cash prices the best of pianos, some new and some used. They go on our sacrifice floor tagged at a price that covers nothing but hard luck and necessity. We have all makes. We play no favorites. We sell—that's all.

FIRE

No commission or expense will be charged by us on the sale of pianos coming in from the fire.

$5 Down—$1 a Week

The gilded piano stores, with their costly appointments, their high-salaried sales agents, their sellers' commissions, etc., are no place for the economical piano buyer to go. Take the trouble to look around a little, go up where the rents are not so high and buy your piano right.

House of Best Values
Patronized by the Best People for Over a Quarter of a Century
JOHN BEHAN & CO.
65 Blackstone Street, Boston

A few reasons why we are able to give better values than many dealers. First, our long experience constitutes us good judges of liquors, which insures good quality; second, we buy only direct from best distilleries and wineries in large quantities, which secures lowest prices; third, we have no losses to make up for, through salesmen or credit sales, all our business being strictly cash; and, fourth, our expenses are small in proportion to our business. Send us a trial order and be convinced.

Realizing the growing demand for a good low priced whiskey, we take pride in putting forward the two old favorites and the best sellers—for the price, we beat the world with these old-time well-known brands.

CHATS ON WHISKEY.

BY STERNE BROS.—No. 9.

We are often asked by prominent men in our line of business how we can afford to sell such a superior whiskey as Sterne's Extra for the low price of $2.85 for 4 full quarts. We confess it does look remarkable, but every big house like ours ought to have one big leader to advertise the house and it is only common sense to use something good to advertise a big business. What fools we would be to send out a poor article to boom our business. Many years ago we learned that a house is judged by its representative and knowing this we sent forth a good honest article in Sterne's Extra to represent us among the people who cared for and appreciated a good high-grade whiskey—and we put a price on it so low that it was welcomed by everyone who received it, and year by year it has grown in the esteem of our customers—some of whom have used it nearly 20 years. Now that we have told why we do it we want you to try it and see if we have told you the truth.

'CHEF TRUST' DENIES CHARGE OF SLAVERY

Paola Contestabile Must Retract His Words or "Eat 'Em," Say Members.

HELP GETS "SQUARE DEAL"

Declare Employment Bureau Within Law, But Paola Is in Fight to Stay.

The chefs and head cooks of the big Boston hotels are up in arms over Paola Contestabile's charge that 30,000 kitchen workers of this city are enslaved by their superiors, most of whom are members of the International Culinary Club.

In statements made to the Boston Sunday American, the members of this organization, which Contestabile styles the "Chefs' Trust," repudiate his allegations and declare that they will either make him prove his words or "eat them."

Contestabile, who has recently organized a union of culinary workers, is undaunted by their attitude, and says he will fight the "Trust" to a finish.

He has consulted as counsel Attorney William N. Osgood of No. 6 Beacon street, believing that the International Culinary Club is not only oppressing his fellow work men, but is preventing them from joining the union, and is unlawfully exacting tribute from those whom it in no wise benefits.

Says Law is Violated.

"I have investigated the status of the International Culinary Club," said Mr. Osgood to an American reporter last night, "and I find that though it is running an employment bureau it has no license to do so.

"The law provides a fine of $10 a day for any person or persons conducting an intelligence office without a license, and in the case of a licensed office even any one violating the provisions of the law regulating the business is subject to a fine of from $25 to $50 for each offence."

Mr. Contestabile declares that the Culinary Club is constantly violating the law, especially by the collection of fees from kitchen workers whom it does not place in positions at all.

"My cousin, Alfred Prioli, the chef of the Woodcock, had to collect eight per cent. of the first month's salary from his help when he went back to the Woodcock and turn it over to the club," he said.

Obeyed Club Rules.

Chef Prioli was asked about this, and though he is a member of the International, he finally admitted tuat it was true. "When the Woodcock changed hands a while ago," he stated, "I went to the Highland and took along all my force with me. After about four months the boss sent word for me that he wanted me to come back. So I took my crew back with me. They told me up to the club to collect the fees from all ten of my men. I told them the club didn't get them the jobs, but it was no use, I had to do it, as the by-laws of the club read that way. I presume that this is done everywhere the same way."

Alfred Re, secretary of the International Culinary Club, thus replies to Mr. Contestabile's charges:

"I saw the article in the American on Sunday, June 7, in which Paolo Contestabile made charges against our organization. The International Culinary Club's object is to bring together all the men of culinary ability. This club has also instituted an employment bureau for the exclusive use of its members and their immediate assistants. It has inaugurated a system of classification, by which we are able to put the right man in the right place.

Not Easy to Join Club.

"It is false that we force anyone to join the club, and let me tell you that it is not an easy task to become a member, as you have to go through a formality which equals that of any prominent order. Allow me to say, also, that if Mr. Paolo Contestabile ever attempted to join he would meet with a decisive defeat."

Charles Borlenghi, the chef of the Hotel Touraine, is the president of the club. Contestabile declares he is "the whole thing." Mr. Borlenghi resents his charges.

"He says I'm 'the whole thing,' does he?" remarked Mr. Borlenghi. "Well, you want to look out that I don't do you. No, sir; we are all in this club together, to get all the benefit we can out of it and better the conditions of the trade.

"Contestabile is trying to unionize the kitchen workers, so that they may have shorter hours, is he? Say, boys, some of you used to work with Paul—how many hours did you have to work a day for him?"

"Eighteen," replied two or three of the club members, with a grin.

Has Employment License.

"It is true that we have no license as a club to run an employment office," he continued, "but we have compiled with the law in every way. When we opened quarters we went to the licensing board and applied for a right to run an employment bureau. They told us there we could not take out one as a club, but that one of the members could do so, and so as president I took out the license, and there it is on the wall."

Etheral Guippre, chef of the Commonwealth Motor and Driving Club, said:

"We don't advertise here, nor try to run a general employment business. Though we have a license to employ any class of help we stick to our own line. We don't try to place anyone unless he can give the best of references, and then he pays us eight per cent. of his first month's salary. We try to give a square deal to the hotel man, too."

"It is not right for Contestabile to insult our club," added Joseph Pepino, recently chef of the Cecil. "If he has any grievances against any of us personally that's all right, but there is no need of his attacking the club. It's just jealousy on the part, that's all. We are for the most part holding good positions, and some of us are in places that he lost. And he doesn't like that."

Naval Jackie Wins Cigar From Taft on Convention Wager

Norfolk, Va., June 20.—Because Indiana cast a solid vote against Secretary William H. Taft for the Presidential nomination, thus making one State in which the big candidate did not receive a vote, Seaman Burns, an enlisted man in the United States navy, stationed at the Norfolk navy yard, will be paid a cigar, by Secretary Taft.

Secretary Taft was examining the hole torn in the side of the Florida by the torpedo. "It is quite a big circle," he said.

"If you do as well at Chicago you will have rings around all the other fellows," said Burns.

"That will be easy," was the confident reply. "If I don't get votes in every State in the Union at Chicago I will buy you a good cigar," and the wager was on.

Millionaire Spurns Plea of "Hello" Girl Bride in Court

Albert E. Towers Refuses to Agree to Stay Home Nights and Cut Out Drinking in Sensational Suit.

Poughkeepsie, June 20.—It looks to-day as though, for a second time, all domestic life for Albert Edward Tower, the multimillionaire ironmaster, had been irretrievably shattered, in spite of the well-meant efforts of Supreme Court Justice Keough to reconcile Tower and his second wife, formerly Miss May Bogardus, the prettiest telephone girl in all Poughkeepsie.

Though Justice Keough has reserved his decision in the separation suit brought by Mrs. Tower and has asked the principals to wait until next Friday to see if the difficulty cannot be adjusted, little hope is felt that Tower and his wife will become reconciled.

The present hearing brought out such bitterness on both sides and put Tower and his wife into such flat contradiction that it seems impossible for their opposing views to meet.

The testimony of Mrs. Tower about Mrs. Minnie Weiss, wife of Louis M. Weiss, a wine agent, was one of the points on which Tower made indignant denial of his wife's allegations. Mrs. Tower's story was that of a young wife cruelly neglected, slighted and humiliated before another woman.

Named in Lost Love Suit.

The fact that Tower has been named in a suit brought last month by Weiss against him, and that Weiss demands $100,000 from Tower for alleged alienation of Mrs. Weiss' affections aggravates the situation.

This makes the second marital disaster in Tower's life, the first one ending in a double tragedy.

Albert E. Tower is very wealthy, being credited with seven millions. He is descended from the first Knickerbocker family ever settling on what is known as the Old Post Road. His luxurious home at Poughkeepsie is called Edgehill. It overlooks the Hudson River. At the river wall is the Tower's private wharf where, for the past two years, the ironmaster's palatial yacht, Erl-King, has been anchored while Tower has spent most of his time in New York. This famous yacht, a noted [illegible], figured extensively in the present trial.

In 1883 Tower married Miss Nina Carpenter, daughter of former Governor B. Platt Carpenter of Montana. In 1902 New York State was shocked by the news that Mrs. Tower had shot and killed herself. She had tried to get her husband home, presumably to kill him, but he was detained on business, doubtless saving his life. Teh fact came out that Mrs. Tower had been insane for a long time.

Secretly Wed "Hello" Girl.

Tower lavished money and attentions on his pretty bride. In the Summer of 1905 he fell ill with typhoid. For two months Mrs. Tower nursed him constantly. After his recovery they went to New York and there trouble began.

In a suit for separate support, filed last January, Mrs. Tower recited that at the Waldorf Hotel Tower fell in with a fast set and began to drink heavily. In the Summer of 1906, she alleged, she was supplanted in his affections by Mrs. Weiss, whom Tower brought aboard the yacht Erl-King and introduced to his wife as a Newport society woman.

Mrs. Tower said Mrs. Weis presided at Mrs. Tower's table, stayed aboard the yacht five weeks, insulted Mrs. Tower, called her a "poor factory girl" and said tauntingly that she couldn't ever see why Tower married her.

Agreed to Separat .

On September 28, 1906, the Towers agreed to separate, Mrs. Tower to receive $700 a month and to live at Edgehill, which Tower was to maintain. Mrs. Tower, in return, agreed not to start any legal action.

But Tower failed to live up to his contract, according to the declaration of Mrs. Tower, so she brought suit for separate maintenance, asking a decree allowing her to live apart from her husband and a suitable provision for herself.

Effort was made to stave off the suit. But Mrs. Tower persisted. The case came to a hearing this past week at White Plains. Even just before the hearing there was a conference, and Tower said he was willing to be reconciled only his wife insisted he be home every night and that he stop drinking. He would not agree to the former on the ground that business often kept him away. So the case went to trial before Justice Keogh.

Told Her He'd Run Away.

Mrs. Tower, with eyes red from weeping, said her husband had told her she was repulsive to him, that he was going to run away with another woman, and that he was going to get rid of her by fair means or foul. She recited various threats she said Tower had uttered against her. And she testified positively about Mrs. Weiss and the incidents on the Erl-King. Her sister, Grace Bogardus, corroborated what she had said.

On the stand Tower made general denial. He said his relations with Mrs. Weiss had been wholly proper. He accused Grace Bogardus of stirring up trouble. He said he was willing to maintain his wife properly, but that a preposterous demand had been made on him for $500,000 for her.

The hearing lasted till yesterday, when Justice Keogh gave the couple a week to think it over. The court commented on the big battery of legal talent that had been retained and said that, with such an array of lawyers, he didn't see why the case had been brought into court at all.

RITCHIE'S SECOND DEFEAT IN SIGHT

The nomination of John Ritchie, Jr., to be a member of the Board of Health until May 1, 1910, will come up for confirmation at the meeting of the Aldermen to-morrow afternoon. Two weeks ago Ritchie failed of confirmation by a vote of 8 to 3. The ballot was secret, but to-morrow holds out the promise for a demand for a roll call. Wit hopposition from some of the Republican aldermen, as well as the solid antagonism of the Democratic members, Ritchie's chances for confirmation are slim.

Mayor Hibbard will send in his veto of the order changing the name of Maverick square in East Boston to Doherty park. Alderman Leary will lead a fight to have the order passed over the Mayor's veto.

The Aldermen may dispose of the order appropriating $10,000 for the maintenance by the Consumptives' Hospital department of a day camp for patients.

OPIUM THREATENS CEYLON'S FUTURE

London, June 20.—The increasing use of opium threatens Ceylon. The colonial office is trying to arrive at some plan whereby the consumption of the drug may be decreased.

About 20,000 pounds of opium are annually imported. There are sixty-five licensed opium shops on the island. The committee appointed by Lord Elgin to study the problem recommends the closing of all opium shops. The opium habit is so firmly fastened that it will take years to overcome it.

EVELYN REVEALS CAUSE OF BREAK

SHIELDED HIM AT TRIAL

New York, June 20.—That Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw knew that Harry K. Thaw had access to apartments in the home of Mrs. Susie L. Merrill in West Fifty-fourth street, and knew it during the first trial of Thaw, was told Friday in the offices of her attorneys, O'Reilly and Sullivan.

Futhermore, it was said, this knowledge, and not any disagreement with members of Thaw's family, caused the break in the relations between herself and Thaw. At that time Mrs. Thaw was induced to divulge what she knew about her husband frequenting the Merrill house by the published evidence in the breach of promise case of Susie L. Merrill against Lazarus Levy, the banker, in which the plaintiff testified that Thaw came to her apartments "with a Mrs. Thaw." Mrs. Merrill testified that she knew him as Reid when he "came with the furniture" and that she did not know Reid was Thaw until he had been arrested for White's murder.

Complained of Witness.

"'I want to make the statement as emphatic as possible,' said Mrs. Thaw Friday to Mr. O'Reilly and myself," said Attorney Sullivan, "'that I was never in that house and that I never saw the woman until the days when I was in the witness room in April, 1907. Then I did not understand she was a witness for the defence. I was told that she had been subpoenaed by my husband's attorneys, and I was suspicious of her. In fact, it seemed to me that she had been placed in the witness room by orders of Mr. Jerome or some of his assistants. I complained about her presence, as you know, and was informed that she was interested in the defence of Mr. Thaw.'"

"Mrs. Thaw did not know at the time that Mrs. Merrill had been subpoenaed by her husband's attorneys to prevent her from being summoned by the prosecution to testify of Thaw's actions in her house after he had been married to Evelyn Nesbit.

Loyal to Husband.

"When it was reported," said Mrs. Thaw, "that my relations with my husband had become strained and taht it was due to the conditions which existed in the relationship of myself and the members of the Thaw family I made no comment. But at that time I knew that Mr. Thaw had been to the apartments of the Merrill woman, and I resented it until I recovered my composure.

"I am going to stand by my husband. As regards the separation suit, I will say nothing. I see my husband often and will continue to see him."

FIGHTING 9TH PLANS GRAND CELEBRATION

Famous Regiment Veterans Will Hold Field Day on Lake Quinsigamond's Shores.

Memories of the "Fighting Ninth" Massachusetts Regiment, which under the command of Colonels Cass and Finan made such a glorious record during the Civil War, will be renewed once again on next Thursday when the members of the Ninth Regiment Veteran Association and their friends will celebrate the anniversary of the organization by a trip to Worcester and hold a field day there.

Following sports and a banquet at Edgemere on Lake Quinsigamond, the association will be escorted through the streets of Worcester by the local Hibernians. Later they will be served a collation at Hibernian Hall and an entertainment will conclude the day's festivities.

Leaving headquarters of the association in the old Franklin Schoolhouse on Washington street at 8 o'clock in the morning the members and their friends, headed by the Mission Church band, will march to Park square, where cars will be taken for Edgemere.

The annual banquet will take place at 3 o'clock. In the interim there will be a baseball game, hurling, a fat men's race and other sports. There will be opportunity for rowing, canoeing and swimming.

At 5 o'clock the party will take trolleys for Worcester, where the members will be received by an escort of the four companies of Hibernians, under the command of Major John Rogers. A parade through the principal streets will follow. The banquet and entertainment will follow. All will leave for Boston at 10 o'clock.

Commander Dennis J. Sexton has appointed a committee, headed by Captain Patrick T. Sullivan, to have charge of the arrangements.

WATER BUREAU CUT SAVES CITY $50,000

Water Commissioner Hannan, declining to order the discharge of 150 employees as recommended by the Finance Commission, will retrench in his department expenses by discharging fifty employes to-morrow, and will reorganize the department from superintendents down.

In the future the fire department will be charged for water used at fires, and under this arrangement the receipts of the water department will be largely increased. Commissioner Hannan argued with the Finance Commission that inasmuch as the expenses of the department were figured by the commission as being too high compared with receipts that it would be only just to credit the water department for water supplied free to other departments. The commission agreed with him.

Commissioner Hannan's plan has the full approval of the Finance Commission, and is expected to save the city $50,000 per year.

A general superintendent is to be appointed for the distribution division, with one assistant superintendent. The three territorial superintendents will be abolished.

An Inspector of Gates is to be appointed. The "service pipe gang" and the group of men who do repairs in the future will be consolidated under one head.

The Parker Hill reservoir is to be transferred to the Park Department, and the Fisher Hill reservoir to the Metropolitan Water Works.

The number of men employed in the different plants at the South End yard will be reduced, as will also the number in each of the outlaying yards.

The men in different divisions in the different yards are to be transferred to other yards, as this, the commissioner believes will be healthful to the discipline and conduct of the department.

TWO BOYS DROWNED.

Baltimore, Md., June 20.—Richard M. Ward, eleven, son of the late James Montford Ward, and John Thomas Coughlin, thirteen, of Baltimore, were drowned this afternoon.

WIDOW TOO CLEVER FOR POLITICIANS

HER REMARKABLE CAREER

Left With Seven Children When Husband Died and Has Fought Her Way to Success.

To her long list of remarkable accomplishments for a woman, "the Widow Doyle," as they call her out Jamaica Plain way, has added a veritable coup in landing a City Hall teaming contract, in spite of the scheming of the district politicians and contractors, who have had things their own sweet way for years.

Her victory over political opposition was clinched yesterday when the teaming contract for Roxbury and Jamaica Plain district was awarded to her. The value of the contract is about $60,000. And its award to a woman marks an end to the power of some of the old-time "pols."

Since her husband died seven years ago Mrs. Doyle has supported her seven children, put her second oldest boy Frank through Harvard, handled private teaming contracts with business-like sagacity and generally shown an ability to care for herself and her own.

Now she has beaten out "Jim" Noble, the recognized "Boss" of the district, has scared the other "pols" and has a city contract to boot.

Politicians Let Out Howl.

When the bids for the teaming contract for Roxbury and Jamaica section or District 7 were opened by Superintendent of Streets Guy Emerson, the lowest bid was that of Mrs. Mary Doyle & Co., which offered men and teams at a schedule of $3.15 a day for single teams, $4.48 a day for double teams and $2 a day for extra men.

This was the lowest schedule offered. A howl went up from the contractors and the "pols" when the figures were made known.

Those posted on teaming affairs knew that "Mrs. Mary Doyle & Co." meant Mrs. Mary Doyle of No. 22 Weld avenue and her son Frank, just taken into partnersoip. And they realized that "The Widow" had "put it all over" the politician-contractors, who have been waging ungallant warfare against her for years.

The "pols" realized that the contract in all likelihood go to Mrs. Doyle, especially in view of administration promises to keep down municipal expenses. And, when that contract was signed, it meant a great stroke of victory for "the Widow Doyle."

Put Son Through College.

In the fight against "the widow," her opponents have descended to unfounded stories and to exaggerated reports about her and her family. She has been accused of giving champagne suppers to win over heads of city departments. The fact that she was able to put her son through college was used as an argument that she did not need any money and had no business competing for a contract.

The "champagne suppers" story Mrs. Doyle indignantly denies. "Just a few little parties that my children gave," she told a Boston Sunday American reporter. "I never attempted to subsidize department heads." They said that I wore fine clothes and that I was able to give my son Frank a college education. What of it? It was a cowardly attempt to harm a woman. I'm not afraid of any of them, whether they fight in the open or in the dark.

"Whatever I have accomplished has been through hard work. My husband died seven years ago, leaving me seven children, the youngest on my knee. There was a small store and a few horses and teams. He never had done much in the contract line, but I saw an opening, went ahead and have done fairly well. Most of my contracts have been private ones. I have put in bids for city work, but never got anything besides a few small watering cart jobs.

"A little while ago I got the sanitary contract for this district. I appreciated then that the present administration in City Hall was doing things honestly, so I decided to try for the general contract for the work in this district. I have about forty horses and can do the work all right.

Schemes to Defeat Her.

"Somehow or other the politicians got wind of my plan. I'd be ashamed to tell some of the things they did to defeat me. They had been jealous for years of my private contracts and even succeeded in getting one big one away from me by cutting prices.

"So I determined to teach them a lesson. Six dollars a day is the regulation price for double teams. I got that in private contracts. They cut me in that line. I decided to cut their figures for the city work. They were surprised all right. No one dreamed I would bid as low as $4.48.

"One man who was particularly envious of my business, circulated the story that there were to be no bids lower than $5. Then he turned around and bid a lower figure himself. He didn't bottom my price, however, and—well, I guess he's kind of mad about it."

James E. Noble, popularly regarded as "the man who can pull things off in the way of contracts for Roxbury and Jamaica Plain," had little to say when a Boston Sunday American reporter asked him about the division 7 contract. He merely said he "didn't care a rap who got it." Mr. Noble had put in a bid for $4.75 for double teams.

WORKING GIRLS WIN SOCIETY PLAUDITS

Twenty-five working girls from the Denison House, in the South End, entertained an audience of society folk in the rose gardens of the beautiful Stephen M. Weld estate in Dedham, yesterday afternoon by a very creditable presentation of "Twelfth Night." The proceeds will be used for summer work by the members of the Denison House.

Much credit was reflected upon Carloyn Virginia Tanner and Mrs. John K. Burgess, who were in charge of the afternoon's entertainment.

VOLUNTEERS TO SERVE AS LIFE SAVING CREW

Plans Being Made to Protect Bathers at City Point Beach.

As a result of many protests against the disbanding of the regular lifesaving crew at City Point, South Boston, plans are being made for the organization of a private crew to protect the beach. The regular crew was disbanded May 1, and since that time the beach has been left unprotected.

ON MONTH'S VACATION; SENDS BACK WORD SHE HAS JUST MARRIED

MRS. HARRY McKENNA.

GAELIC STUDENTS END YEAR'S WORK

Night School Adjourns Until September with Appropriate Exercises.

With exercises consisting of reading Gaelic poems and a lecture by the Rev. Michael P. Mahon of Cambridge, the Ollam Fodla Gaelic Society brought the school season for the study of the mother tongue of the old land to a close Thursday evening last, in the English High School on Montgomery street.

Father Mahon, who recently delivered a sermon in Gaelic at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross, gave an instructive address, his theme being "The Revival of the Gaelic Language of Ireland." He urged renewed energy for the preservation of Ireland's history.

Then followed selections consisting of Gaelic recitations and Gaelic songs all given by the members of the class and of the society. The class instructor, Patrick J. O'Daly, contributed two Gaelic poems. Mrs. Sexton sang "Killarney," Mr. O'Brien, the vice-president, recited "Cusela Machree," Miss Carr gave a recitation entitled "Innisfail," and for an encore "Ar Dheanga," both being well received. John J. Sharkey recited the "Bridge of Athlone" and "Shamus' Head." Miss Brown sang a Gaelic song, and for an encore sang "Shule Agrah." Miss Grogan sang "Let Erin Remember," and Mr. Desmond gave a reading in Gaelic. Mrs. Feeney recited "Fear Na Grawsta," and her daughter, Miss Feeney, sang two songs, "Glorious St Patrick, Bless Ireland," and the "Three-Leaved Shamrock."

Following the musical programme the chairman of the meeting, Patrick H. Brogan, brought the session to a close by a short address in which he announced that the school was adjourned till September.

SUFFRAGETTES IN LONDON UPROAR

Women Enthusiasts Swarm to Meeting Place at Midnight for Parade.

London, June 21 (2 A. M.)—Everything is in readiness for to-day's great suffragette demonstration, which promises to eclipse the demonstration of last week.

As early as midnight the women began to gather at the point designated for the start, all displaying the most intense enthusiasm. Dressed in white, they presented a unique appearance. Unlike the parade of last week, which was made up almost entirely of professional and university women, to-day's demonstration will be participated in by teachers, Socialists, actresses, students, authors, nurses, working girls, gardeners, musicians and painters. Many countries will be represented, Sweden, Scotland, France and Norway.

Fully 700 banners, the majority bearing the favorite motto, "Rebellion from the tyrants is obedience to God," will be borne in the parade.

WIFE, FAITH, BOND FAIL TO BAR LOVE

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, June 20—After overcoming a number of obstacles which stood in their way, Miss Nora Bayes, one of the principals of the "Follies of 1908" company, and Jack Norworth, a song writer and vaudeville writer, are to be married tomorrow at the home of the bridegroom's father, in Philadelphia.

The engagement was announced while Norworth was still the husband of Louise Dresser, the actress, who secured a divorce last week.

Miss Bayes, who is a Jewess, told Norworth that she would never marry any one not of her own religion, whereupon Norworth, who was a Methodist, promptly adopted her faith.

Miss Bayes had a theatrical contract which stipulated that she should not be married till the close of her engagement, but her manager relented.

There was a parade of the G. A. R. camps and several companies from the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia.

VACATION TURNS IN HONEYMOON

SURPRISE FOR FRIENDS

Little God of Love Hustled in Romance Happily Culminated.

That the month's vacation in Stratford, Ontario, which Miss Emma Otis Fillebrown of No. 27 Colonial avenue, Dorchester, one of the district's prettiest and most popular girls, started upon three weeks ago has been filled with incidents in which the little god of love played a prominent part, is evidenced by the news which has just been received by her relatives that she was married on June 11 to Harry McKenna, Jr., of Stratford.

The announcement of the wedding, which is substantiated by marriage notices from the Canadian papers, came as a complete surprise to her mother, as it will to numerous friends of the young lady in Dorchester, since it was her first visit to the Canadian province and as far as is known she met her husband for the first time, while on her vacation this month.

Cupid Worked Rapidly.

No details of the courtship are furnished, but it is presumed it was of a rapid fire nature, since three weeks after her departure from Boston the announcement of her marriage was received. Cupid appears to have been "on the job" since Miss Fillebrown landed in Canada.

Mrs. McKenna is known in the "upper roads" section of Dorchester. She is a graduate in the class of 1903 of Dorchester High School and has taken a prominent part in the social life of the district. For the past five years she has been a stenographer in the office of C. F. Powers & Co., No. 116 Harvard street, Dorchester.

She is the daughter of Mrs. Amerlia Fillebrown, and lives with her mother and two sisters, Mary and Ethel, at the Colonial avenue address.

Of a Dainty Type.

About a year ago she was engaged to Roger Wattles, a prominent young man of Canton, who is reputed to be wealthy, but for some reason the engagement was broken off a few weeks before the marriage ceremony was to have been performed.

When she left for her vacation about three weeks ago, neither her parents or friends were aware that it would culminate with a marriage. Mrs. McKenna has announced her intention of taking up her permanent residence in Stratford with her husband.

BROTHER LOST, ILL GIRL IS DEPORTED

Russian Maiden, Debarred From Country, Sent to Strange Land, Destitute.

One of the most pitiful deportations of an alien that the Boston immigration officials have ever been called upon to make was that of nineteen-year-old Itte Yung, a pretty, timid little Russian girl, who was sent away on the White Star Liner Cymric yesterday, after being debarred from landing in this country.

Itte's brother, Moritz, came to America some years ago and settled in the West. He made headway and from time to time sent money back to the little Russian village to his mother and little sister. Then came the opening of the Canadian Northwest. Moritz was one of thousands who took up land in Alberta. He tried to get his mother and sister to come to him, but the mother was ill and old and would not leave the old home, and Itte had to stay with her.

Finally the mother died and Itte, taking what money there was after the sale of their household effects, started for America.

Her Money Dwindled.

She thought that if she could get to Boston she would soon get word to her brother. On the way over she lost the written address she had, and the English names, to which she was unaccustomed, slipped her mind and the spoken words she gave for his address could not be made to tally with any town or county in Canada, except Alberta, which is a great territory.

For all of this she could have been released if some responsible party had come forward for her, but on the way to this country, in Germany, it is thought, she contracted a disease of the eyes, trachoma, and the law provides that aliens debarred on account of trachoma must be deported at the first opportunity.

Among Strangers Friendless.

In a few days this poor, friendless girl arrived in Liverpool, sick and destitute. She will, under the new English alien act, be sent out of that country to Hamburg, whence she came into England. She will not be able to get back to her old home in Russia. Her brother will not be able to locate her, nor she him, through the mails, for neither knows where the other is.

Few on the ship who heard the story had dry eyes. A small fund has been raised for her, but her inexperience makes it impossible for her to make the best use of it.

"Reggy" Vanderbilt Working; Bosses 12 Men on Polo Track

Newport, R. I., June 20.—Bulletin! Extry! Reggy Vanderbilt has gone to work!

Mr. Vanderbilt is boss of a force of twelve men and eight horses, and they're all working wonders on the grounds and track of the Westchester Polo Club.

"Hope to get everything in shape for play," Boss Vanderbilt said tonight, "in the first week of July."

The second youngest of the Vanderbilts isn't exactly carrying a dinner pail, and he doesn't wear overalls, but he is, nevertheless, employed. Every morning he motors from Sandy Point Farm over to the grounds at Bateman's Point and gets on the job.

How it all came about was that Alfred Vanderbilt, who is "hacking" in England, as Newport puts it, is president of the Polo Club. When he went away from here, Alfred delegated all his powers to "Reggie," who takes them seriously. "Reggie" is for strict economy.

Some prominent members of the club are George P. Wetmore, J. Church Smith, Stanley Mortimer, Willard Carter, R. L. Agassiz, P. F. Collier and Reginald Brooks.

REPEL FLEET OF TUGS

Cutters and Dispatch Boats Form Squadron That Will Engage Hidden Batteries.

The Coast Artillery and the Ninth Regiment will be taught this week by mimic warfare what should be done to defend Boston from an attack by a foreign foe at sea. They will man the forts and other coast defences and try to repel a fleet composed of government cutters and tug boats. It will be a most interesting war game and highly instructive to the militiamen.

The cutters will represent hostile torpedo boats, the tugs will stand for crusiers and the dispatch boats will serve as battleships. They will try to maneuvre past the forts. The fort guns will be manned by coast artillery and back of the gunners will be the gallant Ninth. The duty of infantry in support of artillery is to charge the enemy if any attempt is made to capture shore batteries by assault, and also to prevent the enemy from landing troops.

This morning the artillery and the infantry will leave their armories for Fort Revere, Fort Andrews, Fort Warren, Fort Strong, Fort Standish, Fort Banks, Fort Heath and the various batteries protecting Boston Harbor.

Artillery Assignments.

The artillery are assigned as follows: One company to Battery Winthop, one to Battery Lincoln, two to Battery Hitchcock, one to Battery Ward, one to Battery Stevenson, two to Battery Bartlett, one to Battery Cushing, one to Battery McCook, one, to Battery Ripley and one to Battery Sanders. The infantry are assigned: One company to Fort Banks, one to Fort Heath, one to Fort Strong, one to Fort Warren, four to Fort Andrews and four to Fort Revere.

The defenders of the forts and batteries will have no idea of the plans of the fleet. Their tactics in the coming struggle are being kept as much of a secret as if the officers were in command of foreign warships and troops. It is proposed to give the militiamen hard practice. They will have to handle the levers and wheels of the great fortress guns and their success in their work of the coming week will give the government and State officials an idea of how much service the Massachusetts volunteers would be if called upon to actually defend Boston from an invading foe.

It has been agreed in deciding whether the defence or the enemy are victorious that if the attacking force succeeds in landing enough men in boats to constitute a numerically superior army to the soldiers in the forts and batteries that the sea fighters will be awarded the palm.

The armament of the boats of the enemy is unknown to the defence, which will have to keep up such a heavy fire at threatened points that the invaders will be unable to land.

On Board Enemy's Ships.

Some of the officers of the Ninth Regiment and the Naval Brigade will be aboard the enemy's ships and members of the Naval Reserve will try to land at the forts under cover of the guns of the fleet. One naval reserve man will be accounted in the reckoning to offset a great many of the artillerymen or infantry.

This morning the Boston companies who are to man the forts will assemble at armories for inspection and then march to a wharf, where they will embark on a steamboat and be taken to the posts to which assigned. This afternoon the troops will devote to getting settled in camp. Tomorrow the war manevres will begin.

Lieutenant-Colonel Logan will command at Fort Andrews Major Murphy at Fort Revere Major Casey at Fort Banks and Colonel Donovan will serve as inspector of supports. He will have his headquarters at Fort Heath.

The big attacks on the forts by the fleet are expected on June 27 and June 29.

Rugs Rugs Rugs

At the recent Carpet and Rug sale held in New York, we were large buyers of Tapestry, Velvet, Axminster, Brussels and Wilton Rugs. Usually the mills fail to deliver from thirty to fifty per cent of the order placed. Because of this non-delivery, we usually buy the same amount beyond what we need. This season the unexpected happened—we got every rug we ordered and a few more, and we got them all at once. We have not display space for so many patterns, grades and sizes, and must dispose of one-third of these rugs immediately.

Patterns and colorings are new, in many cases weaves are new, the only thing that is the matter with these rugs is the number of them that we have.

We have charged our profit on these rugs to experience.

Famous Athletes to Compete for Benefit of Nursery Babes

PLAYING IN THE SAND-BOX
ONE OF THE SISTERS AND HER SMALL CHARGE.

Happy youngsters in sand at K. of C. Day Nursery in care of kind attendants, while mothers are toiling for their bread.

To aid the Knights of Columbus Day Nursery, a worthy charity where mothers who are obliged to toil daily can leave their children under the care of competent nurses and Sisters of Charity, is the object of the big field day which the three South Boston councils will hold at the Locust street grounds next Saturday.

The nursery is entirely dependent upon the funds advanced by the order for maintenance. Since it was established in February, 1907, by the South Boston Pere Marquette and Robert Fulton councils, the work of the nursery has been constantly increasing until at the present time from fifty to seventy-five little ones, ranging in age from six months to five years, are cared for daily.

There is no fee received for the good work. Parents leave their babes at the nursery in the early morning. They are given an opportunity to play in the sand boxes, swings and other pleasure contrivances, always under the watchful eyes of the sisters. In the afternoon some of the smaller children, fatigued by the play, enjoy a nap in the dainty white cribs provided for the purpose. A kindergarten school is maintained during the cooler months. Physicians from the Carney Hospital look after the physical welfare of the little ones.

Thousands Cared for.

The nursery has proved such a popular feature that it is now considered by the clergymen of the district to be indispensable. The present handsome quarters at No. 378 West Fourth street were secured after the original quarters in West Fourth street, near Dorchester street, had proven entirely inadequate. Since the establishment of the nursery several thousand children have been cared for. Sister Mary Elizabeth of the Carney Hospital is in charge daily.

For several months the committees have been working for the success of the field day. Headed by John T. Colton, past grand knight of Pere Marquette Council, the executive committee has arranged a program that in length and interest is sure to have some feature that will please every one who attends.

John D. O'Reilly of South Boston Council is treasurer. Others on the committee are: John H. Newman, Pere Marquette Council; Philip L. McMahon, Robert Fulton Council; Edward A. Moorse, South Boston Council; Frank A. Stout, William J. Sullivan, James P. Manning, Peter W. Walsh, Edward J. Rooney, William T. Bulger, James S. McKenna, Jeffrey J. Pendergast, Dr. M. J. Hart, John M. Costello, D. W. Creed, John Cronin, Martin J. Frain, James T. Mooney, Edward F. Martin, Thomas J. Barry, John H. Perkins, James E. Pray, Charles F. Leahy, Arthur D. Cooper, Michael J. Connolly, Thomas L. Lyons, Joseph A. F. O'Neil, James M. Hickey, J. E. Crowley, Edward F. Ford, H. S. Hollscher, Robert E. Tobin, Timothy J. Callahan, John E. Donovan, John B. Driscoll, Edward P. Horrigan, Francis E. Connelly, John F. O'Keefe, Edward L. Hopkins, Charles J. O'Connor, Frank J. D. Ferguson and Michael J. Driscoll.

Committee on Athletics.

The committee on athletics, including Edward L. Hopkins, Francis E. Connelly, John D. O'Reilly, Charles F. Leahy and Edward F. Ford, have secured the entries of some of the fastest amateur athletes in the country for the games. There will be both scratch and handicap events, besides field contests, and before the entries close it is expected that the entry of almost every prominent athlete in New England will have been received.

Another feature which is attracting much interest is the ball game between nines representing the Gate of Heaven Church and the South Bostons. Some of the strongest semi-professional players in the State will be found in the line-up of both teams, and as the rivalry between the two teams is keen, with the additional incentive of a substantial purse, a hard fought contest is assured.

Special amusement features will be provided for the children during the day. There will be the ever popular Punch and Judy show, flying horses, Mexican burros, moving pictures and countless other attractions.

The principal feature of the evening's entertainment will be an address by a prominent speaker, whose name will be announced later. There will be dancing for both young and old, and the event is expected to surpass both from a monetary and pleasure standpoint the successful outing of a year ago, when a tidy sum was realized for the nursery.

Lincoln Beachey did not dare to risk his airship in the high wind blowing at Paragon Park last evening, but Aeronaut Bonetti, who was scheduled to make an ascension at the same time, 5:30 p.m., went up, was blown swiftly toward the ocean, and was only saved from a plunge into the sea by a hasty parachute jump at a height of 500 feet.

He cast off from the big bag just as he was sailing over the Atlantic House, and landed on the rocks only ten feet from the surf.

The fact became known after his perilous flight and drop that he was suffering from two broken ribs and the same number of fractured fingers. These injuries Bonetti sustained while doing the death-defying "Slide for Life" feat at the park recently.

Beachey and Bonetti had planned to engage in a sort of contest, both starting to fill their bagsatthesametime. Beachey expected to fly half a mile through the air, turn about and land in the place where he ascended. Bonetti, during the same interval, was to raise to a considerable height and execute a parachute drop. The wind was so strong that Beachey would have risked not onl yhis airship but his life had he taken the trip

He will try again to-day.

SHOTS RAINED ON GLIDDEN BALLOON

LATER TREED BY MAD BULL

Charles J. Glidden walked into the Hotel Touraine last night after making a fifty-mile balloon trip and serving as the target by rural riflemen. The shots were fired while the airship was sailing over Brattleboro, Vt., and the aim was true. But the gas put such a pressure on the bag that the bullets glanced off. The balloon will be sent to New York for expert examination. Apparently no harm was done, but Mr. Glidden wants to be sure that its strength has not been weakened.

Mr. Glidden declared last night to an American reporter that because of the shooting at his balloon he has decided to abandon some of his contemplated ascensions in certain foreign countries where the natives are unfamiliar with balloons, for he says, "If any one will shoot at you here, where balloons are not such an uncommon sight, what would they do in India or on an African desert if they saw one floating through the air?"

His airship is named "Boston." It rose from Pittsfield at 5 o'clock Friday evening with Mr. Glidden and Leo Stevens of New York aboard. It descended on a mountain in West Dummerston, Vermont, two hours later. In that time the aeronauts had traveled fifty miles. Their course had been an air line.

Battle Bull and Dogs.

The airship came down to earth in a wild district with darkness almost at hand. The first experience of the aerial navigators, after getting to terra firma was to escape a maddened bull. He treed them for a while and then they were attacked by a savage dog who did not understand how people could drop out of the clouds instead of approaching along a pike. The bold navigators tramped four miles before they could get shelter in a farmhouse. The first one they reached opened no hospitable door. On the contrary an irate farmer called them tramps and threatened them with the dog.

They had to use clubs to keep a canine at bay when they reached the home of Representative W. W. Bennett. But his barks and growls aroused the Vermont solon, who asked the weary strangers in and gave them shelter for the night. The balloon was packed for shipment to New York before Mr. Glidden started for Boston.

When seen at the Hotel Touraine, he said:

Two Bullets Hit Bag.

"We had an exciting trip. At the start we escaped striking an electric light wire by dumping out sixty pounds of sand. There was a strong wind blowing and it took us into Vermont in a hurry. When that unknown opened fire on us in Brattleboro it was a frightful sensation. We were at an altitude of 2,000 feet and two-fifths of a mile is a long way to fall. We heard two bullets thud against the bag. To our great relief the man did not hit the balloon again. We could not locate the man with the gun. When we looked down we could not see a human being. We were then passing over the northern corner of the town."

"We did not think that the bullets had injured the balloon, but decided to take no chances by continuing the voyage, so we landed. It was in a lonely spot on a mountain 2,000 feet high. While we were packing up the balloon a big red bull charged us.

Warned Off by Farmer.

"We raced for a stone wall, and to our horror, when we reached it, we saw it was reinforced by lines of wire. But the bull's horns were so near we went over wall and wire without any pause. We did not want to leave the balloon to the mercy of the bull and so consented to be treed for an hour before he decided to go away.

"Then we finished packing and our next move was to look for shelter. We tramped for an hour before we came to the first house. It was dark and gloomy but we knocked at the door. 'What do you want?' shouted an angry voice. 'We're aeronauts and want to be put up for the nigh.,' was our reply. 'Be off—you're tramps!' he shouted. 'Be off, or I'll set my dog on you' We left his premises without any further argument. We were on the road for two hour after that without seeing a house. If there were any we passed them in the darkness. When we reached Mr. Bennett's house we had to hold his dog at bay with clubs until he came down and kindly asked us in. The dog meant business."

HUB NEWSDEALERS' OUTING JULY 8

The annual outing of the Newsdealers' Association of Greater Boston will take place Wednesday, July 8, at Lake Pearl, Providence, R. I., and, if present hopes materialize, the Rhode Island newsdealers will join in the outing and compete with the Bostonians in athletic sports.

Frank P. Dyer of Arlington, chairman of the committee in charge, has just sent a "sassy" letter to the secretary of the Rhode Island Association, challenging the Rhode Islanders to baseball, running races, potato races, and egg races for the ladies. If the Rhode Island bunch don't like that list of sports, let them name what they do want and the Boston chaps will play them at their own games.

It is confidently expected that this rash challenge will be taken by the Rhode Island newsdealers, who don't propose to let the Boston men crow over them.

SAYS WIFE CAUSED HEART DISEASE

Cincinnati, June 20.—Harry Henn, who says he is henpecked, applied to Judge Woodmansee and a jury to divorce him from Mrs. Henn.

"I have heart disease," he said, "and I fear the excitement of living in constant turmoil with my wife will kill me."

"How about the excitement attendant on a divorce case?" asked the judge. "Isn't that likely to be as dangerous for your heart as the ordinary ups and downs of married life?" Mr. Henn said he thought not. The case is not ended.

Summer Is Short Story Time

THE July number of COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE is a short story magazine—besides being all the other kinds that a great general magazine should be. Among the unusual stories which dot this splendid number are:

"The Wonders of the Deep"
By Gertrude Pahlow
How SHE was supposed to be scientifically interested in fish. How HE accordingly talked fish morning, noon and night, until he was told that "An over-elaborated fish course may spoil a very good dinner." Whereupon all his troubles were over.

"Filippo"
By Raymond MacDonald Alden
A colorful story of California and of the doctor who once played Providence down in the coast country, between Los Angeles and San Francisco.

"The Sin Buyer"
By Bruno Lessing
Young Yankel needed a thousand dollars on which to get married—and got it, in a very curious way known only to his people. One of Lessing's most achingly funny stories.

"The Hand of Life"
By Lucia Chamberlain

"Why I Wrote Sally Ann's Experience"
By Eliza Calvert Hall
On the tenth anniversary of the first publication of this remarkable short story in COSMOPOLITAN (reprinted in full in this issue) the author tells how and why she came to write it. This is the story which President Roosevelt recently recommended "as a tract in all families where the men folks tend to selfish or thoughtless or overbearing disregard of the rights of their womenkind."
